SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION ADOPTED.

A.—For the Dēva-nāgarī alphabet, and others related to it—

अ a,	आ ā,	इ i,	ई ī,	उ u,	ऊ ū,	ऋ ṛi,	ॠ ṛe,	ए ē,	ऐ ai,	ओ o,	औ ō,	औ au.
क ka	ख kha	ग ga	घ gha	ङ ṅa	च cha	छ chha	ज ja	झ jha	ञ ña
ट ṭa	ठ ṭha	ड ḍa	ढ ḍha	ण ṇa	त ta	थ tha	द da	ध dha	न na
प pa	फ pha	ब ba	भ bha	म ma	य ya	र ra	ल la	व va or wa
श śa	ष sha	स sa	ह ha	ड़ ṛa	ढ़ ṛha	ळ ḷa	ल् ḷha

Visarga (:) is represented by h, thus क्रमशः kramashah. Anuswāra (◌̣) is represented by m, thus सिंह siṃh, वंश vaṃś. In Bengali and some other languages it is pronounced ng, and is then written ng; thus बंग baṅga. Anunāsika or Chandra-bindu is represented by the sign ~ over the letter nasalized, thus में mē̃.

B.—For the Arabic alphabet, as adapted to Hindōstānī—

ا a, etc.	ج j	د d	ر r	س s	ع 'e
ب b	چ ch	ڌ ḍ	ڑ r̥	ش sh	غ gh
پ p	ح h	ز z	ز z	ص s	ف f
ت t	خ kh	ج̣ ḡ	ز̣ ḡ	ض z	ق q
ث ṭ				ط ṭ	ک k
ث s				ظ ẓ	گ g
					ل l
					م m
					ن n
					when representing anunāsika in Dēva-nāgarī, by ~ over nasalized vowel.
					و w or v
					ه h
					ی y, etc.

Tanwīn is represented by n, thus فَاوْرَان fauran. Alif-e maqsūra is represented by ā;—thus دَاوَا da'wā.

In the Arabic character, a final silent h is not transliterated,—thus بَنْدَة banda. When pronounced, it is written,—thus گُنَاہ gunāh.

Vowels when not pronounced at the end of a word, are not written in transliteration. Thus बन ban, not bana. When not pronounced in the middle of a word or only slightly pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word, they are written in small characters above the line. Thus (Hindī) देखता dēkh'tā, pronounced dēkhtā; (Kāsh-mīrī) देख tēh; कर kar, pronounced kor; (Bihārī) देखिय dēkhath.

C.—Special letters peculiar to special languages will be dealt with under the head of the languages concerned. In the meantime the following more important instances may be noted :—

- (a) The ts sound found in Marāṭhī (च), Paṣhtō (چ), Kāshmīrī (چ, च), Tibetan (ཚ), and elsewhere, is represented by ts. So, the aspirate of that sound is represented by tsʰ.
- (b) The dz sound found in Marāṭhī (ज), Paṣhtō (ځ), and Tibetan (ཇ) is represented by dz, and its aspirate by dzʰ.
- (c) Kāshmīrī چ (چ) is represented by ñ.
- (d) Sindhī ڄ, Western Pañjābī (and elsewhere on the N.-W. Frontier) چ, and Paṣhtō چ or چ are represented by n.
- (e) The following are letters peculiar to Paṣhtō :—
 ټ t; ځ ts or dz, according to pronunciation; ډ d; ږ r; ښ zh or g, according to pronunciation; ښ sh or kh, according to pronunciation; ښ or ښ n.
- (f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhī :—
 ٻ bb; ٻ bh; ٺ th; ٺ t; ٺ th; ڀ ph; ڄ jj; ڄ jh; ڄ chh;
 ڄ ñ; ڄ dh; ڄ d; ڄ dd; ڄ dh; ڪ k; ڪ kh; ڳ gg; ڳ gh;
 ڳ n; ڳ n.

D.—Certain sounds, which are not provided for above, occur in transcribing languages which have no alphabet, or in writing phonetically (as distinct from transliterating) languages (such as Bengali) whose spelling does not represent the spoken sounds. The principal of these are the following :—

á ,	represents the sound of the a in all .
ā ,	„ „ „ a in hat .
ě ,	„ „ „ e in met .
ō ,	„ „ „ o in hot .
é ,	„ „ „ é in the French était .
o ,	„ „ „ o in the first o in promote .
ō ,	„ „ „ ō in the German schön .
ü ,	„ „ „ ü in the „ müke .
th ,	„ „ „ th in think .
dh ,	„ „ „ th in this .

The semi-consonants peculiar to the Muṇḍā languages are indicated by an apostrophe. Thus k', t', p', and so on.

E.—When it is necessary to mark an accented syllable, the acute accent is used. Thus in (Khōwār) ássistai, he was, the acute accent shows that the accent falls on the first, and not, as might be expected, on the second syllable.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The present Volume of the Linguistic Survey contains an account of the so-called "Gipsy² Languages" of India, so far as information concerning them has become available.

It has been prepared by Professor Sten Konow, of Christiania, Norway, who was for several years my Assistant, and to whose learning and unsparing collaboration I am heavily indebted. I have myself carefully gone through his manuscript, and have here and there added a few remarks over my signature. As General Editor of this series of volumes, I am therefore responsible for all statements contained in it.

GEORGE A. GRIERSON.

GIPSY LANGUAGES.

INTRODUCTION.

Migratory tribes are found all over India, and are of different kinds. Some of them, like the Penḍhārīs, are descended from adventurers and individuals belonging to various castes and trades; others, like the Banjārās, Ōḍs, and so on, are occupational units, who wander all over the country in pursuance of their trade; others again are much of the same kind as the Gipsies of Europe, tumblers, jugglers, acrobats, or thieves and robbers, who have come under the Criminal Tribes Act.

It has become customary to call these tribes Gipsies, but this designation does not imply any connexion between them and the Gipsies of Europe. The word Gipsy, which is, as is well known, a corruption of Egyptian, was originally applied to those well-known migratory tribes who began to make their name known and feared in Europe from the beginning of the 15th century, because they described themselves as coming from Egypt. The word has then also come to be used to denote other peoples of similar, migratory, habits, and this is the sense in which it has been used in this Survey. The Gipsy Languages are, accordingly, dialects spoken by the vagrant tribes of India.

Our information about these forms of speech is necessarily limited. Many of these vagrants simply speak the language of their neighbours. Others are bilingual or even multilingual, adopting the speech of the district where they happen to stay in all their dealings with outsiders, but retaining a peculiar dialect of their own when talking among themselves. For this latter purpose many of these tribes have also developed a secret argot, which they commonly call Pārsī, 'Persian,' and they are naturally shy of initiating others into it. These argots will be dealt with below. They have not anything to do with grammar, but are based on some dialect, which may be designated as the home tongue of the tribe. Moreover, such tribes as have not developed any artificial argot, often have a dialect of their own. Such forms of speech cannot, of course, be expected to present the same consistency as ordinary vernaculars. It is a consequence of the migratory habits of the tribes, that their languages are to some extent mixed. Where the base is comparatively uniform and practically identical with one definite tongue, such dialects have, in this Survey, been dealt with in connexion with that form of speech. Thus the dialects of the following vagrant tribes have been described in connexion with Dravidian languages in Vol. IV of this Survey.

Name of dialect.	Estimated number of speakers.
Korava and Yerukala	55,116
Kaikāḍi	8,289
Burganḍi	265
Gōlari	3,614
Kurumba	10,399
Vaḍari	27,099
TOTAL	104,782

Others have been dealt with in connexion with the Bhil languages in Vol. IX, Part iii, of this Survey, viz. :—

Name of dialect.	Estimated number of speakers.
Bāori	43,000
Banjāri	158,500
Chāraṇi	1,200
Habūṛā	950
Pārādhī or Ṭākaṇkāri	8,648
Siyālgiri	120
Tarimūki or Ghisāḍi (Vol. IX, Part ii)	1,669
TOTAL	214,087

There remain some vagrant tribes, who have, during the operations of this Survey, been reported to possess languages of their own, viz. :—

Name of dialect.	Estimated number of speakers.
Bēldāri	5,140
Bhamṭi	14
Ḍom	13,500
Gārōḍi	?
Gulguliā	853
Kanjari (including Kuchbandhi)	7,085
Kōlhāṭi	2,367
Lāḍi	500
Machariā	30
Malār	2,309
Myānwālē or Lhāri	?
Naṭi	11,534
Ōḍki	2,814
Peṇḍhāri	1,250
Qaṣāi	2,700
Sāsi	51,550
Sikalgāri	25
TOTAL	101,671

Of these, Machariā was returned from the Kapurthala State as spoken by a tribe of fowlers who had come from Sind. It has turned out to be ordinary Sindhi with a slight admixture of Pañjābī and need not occupy us any more in this place. The remaining Gipsy dialects named above will be described in the ensuing pages. This list is unfortunately far from exhausting the number of such languages. We know that the Chūhrās, the Dalāls, the Naqqāsh, and several other tribes and castes possess secret trade jargons of their own, and many criminal tribes have been described who freely mix their speech with slang words and phrases in order to prevent outsiders from understanding them. No new materials about them have, however, been forwarded for the purposes of this Survey, and I can therefore only refer to such authorities dealing with them as I have come across.

The various Gipsy tribes have not been distinguished in the language returns of the published Reports of the last Census of 1911. It is therefore difficult to compare the figures with the estimates made for the purposes of this Survey. The total returned under the head of Gipsy languages in 1911 was 28,294 distributed as follows:—

Ajmer-Merwara	209
Bombay	8,362
Central Provinces and Berar	2,274
Punjab	5,640
United Provinces	1,673
Baroda State	536
Bombay States	2,326
Central India Agency	1,097
Hyderabad State	4,566
Punjab States	474
Rajputana Agency	456
Other Provinces	681
TOTAL	28,294

The Gipsy dialects considered in the ensuing pages can be divided into two groups, ordinary dialects and argots. The former group comprises Classification. Beldārī, Bhamṭī, Lādī, Ōdkī and Peṇḍhārī, the latter Dōm, Gārōḍī, Gulguliā, Kanjarī, Kōlhātī, Malār, Myānwālē, Naṭī, Qasāī, Sāsī and Sikalgārī. The former group is of the same character as the Gipsy languages described under the head of Bhili in Vol. IX, Part iii, the latter can be compared with argots such as those used by the Panjab gamblers, the Chūhrās, etc. See Authorities, above.

Within the first of our two groups the Peṇḍhārīs in some respects occupy a position apart, being composed of various elements without any common race or religion. Their dialect shows that they have lived for some time in Eastern Rajputana, and history corroborates this inference. Both the Peṇḍhārīs and some of the Bhamṭās speak dialects which can be described as a mixture of Dakhiṇī Hindōstānī and Jaipurī. Most Bhamṭās, however, speak Telugu. Lādī is in all essentials a form of Jaipurī. The Ōḍs are probably related to the Vaḍars, who speak a dialect of Telugu, and they are probably originally Dravidians. Their dialect, however, points towards Malwa or perhaps farther west. The Beldārs are described as a Dravidian caste. They usually state that they are Rājput̃s, and Dr. Crooke thinks that they are related to the Ōḍs. The traditions and dialects of all these tribes point to the conclusion that they belong to the same stock as the Banjārās, Habūrās, and other tribes who now use a form of Bhili. The traditions of both Banjārās and Habūrās point towards Rajputana. Ethnologists are, however, agreed that all these tribes are originally Dravidian, i.e. belong to the so-called Dravidian race. Their original home has perhaps been situated farther south. They have, however, become Aryanized at a comparatively early date, and philological considerations point to the conclusion that this occurred somewhere in Rajputana. Dr. Crooke is of opinion that these tribes are branches of one great nomadic race, which also comprises tribes such as the Sāsīs, Kanjars, Naṭs, and so on, i.e. such Indian Gipsies as possess an argot. Also here we find traditions which point towards Rajputana. Thus the Sāsīs were, according to one tradition, originally bards with the Chauhān Rājput̃s. Their first ancestor was, they say, Sās Māl, and his brother Mallanūr was again the ancestor of the Kōlhātīs, who seem to be very closely connected with the Sāsīs. They are also related to the Kanjars, whose traditions only point towards the jungle, and the Naṭs, who sometimes, likewise, maintain that they have come from Rajputana. The Saiqalgars of Benares assert that they were originally Rājput̃s from Marwar. The Dōms are, according to their traditions, Nishādas, and their first ancestor is said to have sprung from the thigh of King Vēna. Now Bēnbans is the name of a modern Rājput̃ sept, which, according to Dr. Crooke, is of obvious Kherwar origin, and the country of the Nishādas is stated in the Mahābhārata (iii, 10538) to begin where the Sarasvatī disappears in the sands. The Nishādas were, according to the Aitarēya Brāhmaṇa, forest robbers, and Mahīdhara identifies them with the Bhillas. In the Agnipurāṇa they are mentioned together with "other dwellers in the Vindhya." It will be seen that these traditions point towards Rajputana or Central India. It will now be of interest to see how far an examination of the dialects spoken by these tribes, i.e. of the dialects on which their argots are based, corroborates these indications. We cannot of course expect to find anything more than indications. The tribes in question are migratory, and, if they spend a long time in any district, they are likely to adopt its current vernacular.

If we begin with Sāsī, it will be shown later on that the dialect varies according to the locality in which it is spoken, it being Hindōstānī in the East and a mixture of Hindōstānī and Pañjābī in the Northern Panjab, the stronghold of the tribe. Stray features such as the softening of hard mutes in the dative and genitive suffixes gu, gā and in words such as dand, tooth, are such as are also found in Western Pahārī.¹ The same is the case with the oblique base ending in ā in weak bases, just as in Marāṭhī. Forms such as the ablative suffix thō; the pronouns ham, we; tam, you, remind us of Gujarātī, but also of Western Pahārī. The dialect of the Sāsīs is closely related to Kōlhāṭī. The termination ō of oblique bases, which is well known from Gujarātī and Western Pahārī, is here common. Forms such as mērē-ku, to me, remind us of Dakhinī Hindōstānī, while the use of the relative base ja with the meaning of a demonstrative in forms such as jabō, then, is in accordance with the practice in Rājasthānī dialects.

If we now turn to Kanjarī, we again find that the oblique base of weak nouns ends in ā or in ō, as in Western Pahārī. Strong masculine bases often end in ō, plural ā, as in Rājasthānī. Demonstrative pronouns such as jō, jī, that, are also in accordance with the usage in that language. Pronouns such as urō, he; yō, you; verbal suffixes such as ir, gir, in the present and past; the frequent use of relative participles; the tendency to form a negative verb, and so forth, perhaps point to the existence of a Dravidian element in the dialect. Kanjarī is a comparatively consistent form of speech and seems to possess less local varieties than many other Gipsy tongues. The Kanjars are ethnographically related to the Sāsīs and Kōlhāṭīs, and also to the Habūrās. Just as the latter speak Gujarātī Bhīlī in the Gangetic Doab, the language of the Kanjars reminds us of Gujarātī, Rājasthānī, and Pahārī even in districts where these languages are not home tongues. The Magahiyā Dōms of Saran and Champaran speak the current Bhōjpurī of the districts. There is, however, also a tissue of Rājasthānī, and the argot of the Dōms in so many points agrees with that in use among the Kanjars that it is impossible to separate the two. Naṭī also has some features which seem to point towards Rājasthānī, though the dialect underlying the argot of the Naṭs varies very much according to district. Gārōḍī is a mixture of Hindōstānī, Eastern Rājasthānī and Marāṭhī, and a similar position must be assigned to the so-called Myānwālē, while Qasāī is based on Hindōstānī, Sikalgārī on Gujarātī, and Malār on Nāgpuriā. Gulguliā, finally, is too insufficiently known to allow us to say anything definite about its position.

There are accordingly also some philological reasons for supposing a common origin of many of the Gipsy tribes. It will be remembered that they are described as belonging to the Dravidian race and that some of them use Dravidian forms of speech. Most of them, however, so far as they come within the scope of this Survey, speak Aryan tongues. If they are of Dravidian stock, that must be a secondary development. Their original language cannot have been Aryan. Now the existence of a Rājasthānī element in so many Gipsy dialects may be taken as an indication that they have abandoned their old speech and adopted an Aryan tongue within an area where Rājasthānī was spoken. It is a curious coincidence that the stronghold of the Bhīls, who must have a similar origin, is found between the territories occupied by

Rājasthānī, Gujarātī and Marāṭhī. Like many Gipsy languages some Bhil dialects also have weak nouns with an oblique base ending in ā. In Gipsy, and in Pahārī, this ā is interchangeable with ō, which is common in Gujarātī. The theory might be hazarded that this use of an oblique base, of the kind elsewhere found in Marāṭhī, in all these tongues must be due to the existence of a substratum different from Rājasthānī and connected with Marāṭhī. There are also other philological indications that the language of Rajasthan and parts of Central India has once, in the times preceding the Rājput invasion, been more closely connected with Old Marāṭhī.

The conclusion arrived at above that most of these Gipsy tribes have a common origin is further strengthened by a consideration of the artificial argots which some of them have developed. We here find so much correspondence in details that we cannot well refrain from inferring that there is some connexion between these Indian argots. All of them are artificial languages devised for the purpose of enabling those who know them to converse with each other without the risk of being understood by outsiders. Such methods of speaking are in use all over the world, and they are known under different names in the different countries. In England they are called 'cant,' 'slang,' 'thieves' latin,' 'pedlars' French,' 'Saint Giles Greek,' 'flash tongue,' 'gibberish,' and so on, in France 'argot,' in Germany 'Rotwaelsch,' in Italy 'gergo,' 'furbesco,' in Spain 'germania,' and so on. Common to all of them is the extensive use of a peculiar vocabulary, and, in addition to this, the practice of disguising common words by means of transpositions and changes of letters. The vocabulary has usually been fetched from the most different sources, or else various figures of speech or associations of ideas lead to the use of well-known words with new meanings. Thus we find in the Spanish argot Germania galle, priest, taken from the Hebrew; dupa, ignorant, from the French; londilla, which is derived from lon, salt, and properly signifies a saltcellar, is used with the meaning of 'parlour,' because Spanish sala, parlour, suggests sal, salt, and so forth. Examples of transpositions from the same argot are tisvar for vista, view; greno for negro, a nigger. Changes of letters are also quite common; compare Rotwaelsch witze instead of hitze, heat. In the Pyrenees we find a device of the same character as the so-called p-language. Thus, instead of jauna, sir, they may say jau-pau-na-pa or jau-gau-na-gra. This of course is a very common way of producing an argot all over the world. Le Duchat tells us of the existence of a similar slang amongst the children of Metz, who add dregue to each syllable; thus vousdregue esdregue undregue foudregue, vous êtes un fou, you are a fool. Still more like our p-language is the Indian schoolboys' Zargarī, where the letter z followed by a vowel is added to each syllable; thus tu-zum kashā jazātizē huzō for tum kahā jātē hō, where are you going? Dr. Leitner found this Zargarī in use amongst the thieves of Peshawar, where he heard sentences such as u-zu-s-ku-zo bu-zu-l-le-zā for us-kō bulā, call him. A similar s-language is recorded from Bengal, where we find sentences such as asami bosboi desdi-bosbo for āmi boi dibo, I will give a book. Sometimes we can observe how similar word-plays take their origin in some new fashion. A certain class of society affects a peculiar way of pronouncing or transforming words, and the compliance with such whims becomes a kind of freemason's token, by which one shows himself as a member of fashionable society. Thus it was usual within certain circles in Paris, about 1830, to add mar to every word, and to speak of boulangemar instead of boulangier, a baker; cafemar instead of café, coffee. That such a way of changing common words well deserves to be called an argot, is brought out by a comparison of the cant of the Yūsufzai badmāshes mentioned by Dr. Leitner,¹ where miri is added to every word.

The argots are chiefly used by criminals and disreputable individuals for the sake of secrecy. Their nature is, however, quite the same as that of the various kinds of play languages which we are accustomed to consider as desultory results of children's fancy. All such speeches must be compared, and it is of interest to observe how the methods are the same all over the world, just as a comparison of languages belonging to different linguistic families discloses a high degree of similarity in fundamental principles.

In India there have probably been argots from the most ancient times. It is possible that they have to some extent their origin in sacrificial rites. It would often be necessary to veil the actual meaning of a ceremony in order to prevent rivals and enemies from perverting it by means of sorcery and counter-rites. The curious words ayavan, dark fortnight; yavan, bright fortnight; sabda, day; sagarā, night; yarya, month; sumēka, year (Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa i. 7.2.25ff.) seem to belong to such a sacrificial argot. The transmutations and changes of words which are sometimes prescribed in the old Sūtras, are perhaps of a similar kind, though the desire to avoid unlucky words also plays a rôle. The Indians, with their predilection for word-play and enigmatic language, must always have been especially qualified for devising means for disguising the meaning of their speech. An old example is found in the Mahābhārata (I. 5754ff.), where Vidura is represented as warning Yudhishtira, in the presence of a number of people, of impending treachery, in a jargon which only the speaker and his hearer could understand.²

There are, at the present day, many different argots in India. Captain, now Sir, R. C. Temple has explained the argot used by the Delhi Dalāls, or Brokers. This is a kind of speech which apparently has a very simple meaning, while some of the words used impart a second, hidden sense to those who are initiated. Thus an apparently innocent use of the numeral two or of words denoting such parts of the body as occur in pairs, conveys the meaning that the Dalāl claims a commission of two annas in the Rupee. Most Indian argots, and all those which are represented in the materials collected for the purposes of this Survey, are, however, of a different kind. They are artificial tongues which do not convey one meaning to the initiated ones and another to outsiders, but which are simply unintelligible to those who have not learnt them. This aim is attained by various means. There is, in the first place, a certain amount of peculiar words which are not used in ordinary speech. Such slang terms are apparently widely used, even by such tribes as have not developed a proper argot. Thus many of the criminal tribes of the Bombay Presidency have got them. Our information on the subject is, however, very imperfect, and it is, in most cases, impossible to state whence they have been taken. It is, on the other hand, noticeable how many of them are identical

² The commentator Nilakaṇṭha says that this jargon made use of the language of outcasts (mlechchhas), which resembled the language of the country, but was ungrammatical and contained words in which syllables were omitted, added, or altered. He then gives examples.

in different argots. Thus the word lug, to die, is used in Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Kanjarī, Dōm, Naṭī, Gārōḍī, Myānwālē, Gulguliā, and Sikalgārī; dūt, eat, occurs in the specimens of Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Kanjarī, Naṭī, Myānwālē, and Sikalgārī; khum, mouth, in Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Naṭī, and Gārōḍī; khaul, khaulā, house, in Sāsī, Dōm, Naṭī, and Sikalgārī, and so forth. Such instances add strength to the conclusion arrived at above that there is a common base in many of these forms of speech. Even if we were able to trace each of these words back to its source, this would not prove anything in regard to the nature of this base. We have seen above how the peculiar words of European argots have been collected from the most different sources. The same is most certainly the case in India. We cannot therefore infer that the Kanjars of Belgaum or the Qasāis are of Arabic descent, because they use some Arabic numerals, or that the Sāsīs have anything to do with the Tibetans even if bārmī, wife, could be proved to be identical with Sherpa permi, or chaṭī, water, with Tibetan chhu. The great number of Hebrew words in Rotwalsch warns us to be cautious in such matters. Still, considering the fact that ethnologists describe the most important Gipsy tribes as Dravidian, it is perhaps of some significance that several of the peculiar argot words seem to have a Dravidian origin. Thus we might compare Kanjarī ṭu-khulē, belly, with Kurukh kūl; Sāsī lōṇā, to beat, with Kurukh lau'ā; Myānwālē gēlō, boy, son, with Yerukala gōvālyū; Kanjarī and Sikalgārī pāḍō, bull, with Tamil māḍu; Dōm ṭignā, eat, with Tamil timnu; Sāsī pīngī, fire, with Kanarese benki; Dōm kichwā, fire, with Kurukh chich; Kanjarī til, tiūr, give, with Tamil tara, Savara tiñ; Kanjarī kidō, give, with Yerukala kūḍ; Myānwālē hiṭwāḍ (compare Giripārī Sirmaurī hōṭ), go, and barwāḍ, come, with Kanarese hō, go, Tamil vara, come, respectively; Sāsī baunnā, Kōlhāṭī bōnā, Naṭī būnā, Myānwālē bōnō, gold, with Tamil pon; Sāsī kūdrā, horse, with Tamil kudirei; Sāsī khaulā, Naṭī khōllā, Sikalgārī khōl, Malār khaul, house, with Gōlarī khōli, room, Malayālam kuḷi, house; compare Malār khulsā, husband, and Yerukala khuliśi, wife, the last syllable of which latter word should be compared with śi in taṅśi, sister; Sāsī ṭūṇḍā, Kōlhāṭī taṇḍe, Naṭī ṭūṇḍā, pig, with Tamil panṇi; Sāsī binkṇā, run, with Kurukh boṅgā; Kanjarī, Sikalgārī khēḍō, Qasāi khēḍā, Kōlhāṭī rhēḍā, house, with Kanarese khēḍā; Kōlhāṭī hēṭṭi, wife, with Kanarese heṇḍati, and so forth. I feel no doubt that we should be able to compare many more words, if we had a fuller knowledge of the argots. In face of the fact that comparatively many of these parallels have been taken from Kurukh, it is perhaps worth while recalling the Kurukh tradition that they have come from the Karnatic and proceeded eastwards along the Narbada, i.e. past the Vindhya. It may also be of interest in this place to make a note of some few details which will be mentioned below when dealing with the individual argots, such as the interchange between hard and soft sounds in Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Naṭī, etc., the disaspiration of aspirates and aspiration of unaspirated sounds in several argots; the frequent use of relative participles, of a negative verb, of certain pronouns and suffixes, and so on, in Kanjarī; the employment of karkē, having done, or similar forms with the meaning of Tamil enru, Yerukala aṇḍa, Sanskrit iti, etc., after a direct quotation, and so forth, though many of these features are also found in Pahārī and elsewhere.

Most words in the Indian argots are not, however, so far as we are able to judge with our present imperfect knowledge, peculiar to them, but belong to the common Aryan vocabulary of India. They are then adapted for use by various means of disguise, just as is the case in European argots. It is noticeable that the transposition of letters after the pattern of the English cant word icelap, police, plays a comparatively unimportant rôle in the materials at my disposal. I may note instances such as Sāsī kābrā=bakrā, goat; chōmī=mōchī, shoe-maker; tēp=pēt, belly; Gārōḍī ḍabō=baḍō, big, and so forth. More common are changes by means of prefixed or suffixed syllables, which then often replace the beginning or the end, respectively, of the word. The details will be mentioned under each argot. In this place I shall only make some general remarks. The simplest way of disguising a word by means of a prefix is exactly the counterpart of the practice in the p-language and Zargārī. Thus in Sāsī kha-kāl, famine; ḍha-gal, neck, the syllables kha, ḍha, respectively, have simply been prefixed to the ordinary word. It is, however, still more common to drop the old initial in such cases; thus, Sāsī khas=das, ten; jhūkhā=bhūkhā, hungry. In some forms of Naṭī we find the initial added again at the end, thus, mēt-khā=khēt, field. In Malār chahinbahin=bahin, sister, we see the entire word in its original form added to the disguised word. These two last devices are of course more easily discovered, and they do not seem to be of common occurrence. With regard to prefixes I would add that we can, in a few cases, trace the existence of rules or rather tendencies which pervade all the argots. Thus k and kh are most commonly prefixed to words beginning with vowels; the palatals ch, chh, j and jh are almost exclusively used with such words as begin with labials; nh is a substitute for aspirated letters and also for s; and r is mostly used before or instead of gutturals. The fact that such is the practice in all our argots is a further indication that they have a common base.

The most usual state of affairs with regard to disguising suffixes is illustrated by words such as Sāsī kauhāḡā=kahā, said, where a single consonant is added. Words such as Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī bāp-tā, father, where a consonant followed by a vowel has been added, are of a similar kind. There are, however, also more complex additions, somewhat like the Parisian cafemar=café. The most common are additions after verbs, such as sar in Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Naṭī ā-sar, come, and uar, wār, bār, in numerous Kanjarī, Dōm, Qaşāī, Malār and Myānwālē verbs, and so forth. We can also here notice how the same additions are used in the same way in more than one argot. Thus k or g is common after verbs ending in vowels or in h in Sāsī, Kōlhāṭī, Kanjarī, Naṭī, Myānwālē, and so on; additions containing an r are, as already remarked, common in verbs in many argots; additions such as Dōm khailā, Sikalgārī khalā, Kanjarū elō, Myānwālē elū, Malār lu, are clearly connected with each other. On the whole it seems certain that not only are the general principles the same in the different argots, but that their application in many cases follows identical lines in all of them.

Conclusions.

If we take a general view of all the facts, we will see that :—

1. the most important Gipsy tribes are classed by ethnologists as forming one race, of Dravidian features, which seem to have long led a migratory life, roaming over most of India;
2. many of them have traditions tracing their origin back to the Rājputs;
3. their dialects also point to the conclusion that the tribes have lived amongst people speaking Rājasthānī dialects, though—

4. some philological features show that there is a sub-structure of languages more related to Marāṭhī than to Rājasthānī ;
5. many of these tribes have developed a secret language based on their dialects ;
6. these argots contain several peculiar words which are common to many of them ;
7. the principles underlying the formation of these cant languages and also their application in individual cases present striking points of analogy in the different tribes ;
8. a certain number of the peculiar cant words seem to be Dravidian ; and
9. some Gipsy tribes speak Dravidian languages.

Taken together, all these points make it highly probable that the various Gipsy languages dealt with in the ensuing pages have a common origin, a language which was once spoken by a tribe of Dravidian race that came under the influence of Aryan tongues in a locality where languages akin to Marāṭhī had been spoken but had to give way to Rājasthānī. This would take us to the Vindhya and the country to the north of the Vindhya, i.e. to the territories which the Aryans found occupied by Nishādas. The tribe or tribes in question have probably lived as vagrants from the most ancient times. With the growth of Aryan civilisation they would naturally choose as their stronghold localities where Aryan civilisation had not got a firm footing. The many Bhil dialects spoken in the hills from the Vindhya and northwards probably have a similar origin and might well be the tongues of descendants of such migratory tribes who had taken to a settled mode of life. Such questions should, however, for the time being be left to the consideration of ethnologists. It may, in this connexion, be noted that we find Gipsy tribes and also Bhils who, at the present day, still speak Dravidian tongues.

It has been remarked above that the denomination Gipsy does not imply any connexion with the Gipsies or Romany Chals of Europe. These latter have originally come from India, and it is well known how they resemble the Indian Gipsies in appearance and habits. It has also been pointed out that their language shows many points of correspondence with the dialect of Indian Gipsy tribes such as the Dōms. In this connexion it is worth while noting the similarity between European Gipsy words such as gājō, a gentile, jukeḷ, dog, and Sāsī kajjā, Naṭī kājā, man ; Kanjari jhūkil, Myānwālē jukeḷā, Sāsī chhūkal, bhūkal, Kōlhātī dhokkal, dog. The language of the gipsies of Europe, however, points towards the extreme North-West of India, and the prevailing opinion amongst scholars seems to be that they have nothing to do with the Indian tribes whose dialects are here under consideration. The hypothesis might, however, be hazarded that members of the same vagrant race from which the Indian Gipsy tribes are descended came up to the North-West, and remained there long enough to adapt their language to the practice prevailing among frontier tribes. Some of them passed on before this adaptation took place and became the ancestors of the Armenian gipsies, whose language does not point to the north-western frontier but rather to Hindōstān. The bulk of these Gipsies later on brought their language, as modified among frontier tribes, to Europe, and became the ancestors of the Romany Chals.

PENĀHĀRĪ.

Under the name of 'Pindarees' the PenĀhārīs are well known in Indian history. They were plundering bands of freebooters who first came to notice after the fall of Tippoo Sultan of Mysore. Of no common race, and of no common religion, they welcomed to their ranks the outlaws and broken men of all India—Afghāns, Marāṭhās, or Jāts. They represented the debris of the Mughul empire, which had not been incorporated by any of the local Muhammadan or Hindū powers that sprang up out of its ruins. Their head-quarters were in Malwa, but their depredations were not confined to Central India. In bands, sometimes of a few hundreds, sometimes of many thousands, they rode out on their forays as far as the opposite coasts of Madras and of Bombay. The most powerful of the PenĀhārī captains, Amir Khān, had an organised army of many regiments, and several batteries of cannon. Their power was finally broken by the Marquis of Hastings in 1817.

Their name is said to be derived from pēṇḍhā, a sheaf, and probably meant originally 'grasscutters.'

At the Census of 1911 the number of PenĀhārīs was returned as 6,413, 100 of whom were Hindūs and 6,313 Musalmāns.

They were distributed as follows:—

Central India Agency	4,014
Elsewhere	2,399
TOTAL										.	6,413

The only district which returned PenĀhārī as a separate language for this Survey was Dharwar of Bombay, which gave a total of 1,250 speakers. Specimens have, however, also been received from Belgaum (Bombay). In other districts PenĀhārī has probably been included under the head of Hindōstānī. It is used only as a home language by the tribe which speaks it. In their intercourse with other people, its speakers employ ordinary Hindōstānī.

To judge from the specimens PenĀhārī is a mixture of rough Dakhinī Hindōstānī with Marāṭhī and Rājasthānī. The particular dialect of the last mentioned language with which their Hindōstānī is mixed, seems to be Jaipurī. Compare pūtā, sons; bāpā, father; chhē, is; chhā, was. It is not necessary to discuss this jargon at length. I give two short specimens, one from each district. They both agree in all essential points. Note the use of nē as a postposition of the locative, present forms such as uttarūnu, I descend; mārūnu, I beat, where the final nu reminds us of the Dravidian termination of verbs, and the way in which kar-kē, having done, is used at the end of a quotation, like the Sanskrit iti and the Dravidian andu, having said.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In summer, a fox being very thirsty and looking for water on all sides, rambled in the forest, but to no purpose. At last he found a little water in a deep pit and jumped into it not heeding the future consequence. There he drank water to his heart's content and began to meditate as to how he was to get out, but there was no way.

Therefore, there he was, a close prisoner, and fell to thinking. Meanwhile, a goat being thirsty, chanced to come down to the very pit by the same road and seeing a fox in it, said,—‘ Oh, sir Fox, you are very clever indeed ; we are all dying of thirst, while you drink water here, having come all alone without the knowledge of anybody. Very well, I too will come down ; how is the water ? ’

Upon this the fox said,— ‘ Oh, friend, it is too sweet to describe. This water tastes just like nectar. You are welcome, come soon and drink it. If anybody else happen to come here, you may not get it.’

At this cunning advice, the silly goat jumped down and drank his fill. Then they both consulted for a long time how to effect their escape.

BHĀMṬĪ.

The Bhāmṭās are a criminal class who are especially active as railway thieves. It seems probable that their original home was the Telugu-speaking country. At the present day, however, settlements are to be found in several of the districts and native states in and bordering on the Bombay Presidency. At the Census of 1911, 4,270 Bhāmṭās were returned from the Central Provinces and Berar and none from elsewhere.

They do not lead a gipsy life but settle in some village from which their gangs start on their thieving expeditions.

They are known under several different names such as Ganṭhachōrs, Uchliās, Vaḍarīs, and so forth. The home tongue of most of them is Vaḍari, a debased form of Telugu.¹ They also speak Marāṭhī, Hindōstānī, and Kanarese. In speaking Kanarese they drop their 'h's.' The home language of some of the Ganṭhachōrs of the Bijapur District is Kanarese. Those of Nagpur in the Central Provinces speak a broken mixture of Dakhinī Hindōstānī and Jaipur Rājasthānī. Only fourteen speakers of this Bhāmṭī were reported from the Central Provinces. As the Bhāmṭās of elsewhere speak Telugu, I do not further refer to them. It is hardly worth while giving examples of the others. As, however, some good specimens have been received, I give a portion of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a folktale received from Nagpur.

The fullest accounts of the Bhāmṭās which I have seen are in pp. 464 and ff. of Part I of the Poona Gazetteer, in pp. 3 and ff. of The History of Railway Thieves with Hints on Detection, by M. Paupa Rao Naidu, Madras, 1900, and in pp. 16 and ff. of the Notes on Criminal Classes in the Bombay Presidency, by M. Kennedy, Bombay, 1908.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was once a Prime Minister named Bīrbal, who had a son. The king, his master, also had a son. These two were great friends, and had all their thoughts and wishes in common, so they agreed that whichever of the two was married first should send his wife to the other's house. The king's son was the one that was first married, and the bride came home to the palace with great pomp. When the prince came to bed with her, he remembered his friend, and said to her, 'You must first go to Bīrbal's house. I must keep my promise.' So she started off for Bīrbal's house, carrying in her hand the five lustration lamps of her wedding night.

On the way she met four thieves, who straightway began to relieve her of all ornaments. Said she, 'Why are you taking off my ornaments? Let me first go to Bīrbal's house, and afterwards come back to you. Then you can take them.' The thieves approved of this suggestion, and left one of their number sitting there, while the other three went off to look for more booty.

So she went on to Bīrbal's house. Bīrbal,¹ as soon as he saw her, made her to sit upon a bed, and thought in his mind, 'The king is partly wise, and partly a fool; for he has sent here, to me, the wife of his own bed.' Then he said to her, 'For many days your husband has been my brother. Now I look upon you as my sister, and on him as my sister's husband.' Then he gave her a present of a handsome veil and a bodice, and of five valuable jewels, and told her to go home. So she went back by the way she had come, and found the thief sitting where she had left him.

'Now,' said she, 'take off all my ornaments. I have got five more than I had when you saw me last.' While they were talking the three other thieves came up. They had been so successful in their thefts that they had got booty sufficient to feed seven generations without being exhausted. They said, 'Your footsteps have brought us good luck. We have found enormous booty. So we will not take your ornaments. Please accept five more ornaments from us.' So they gave her five ornaments, and she returned to the king, and told him her adventures. The king wondered in his heart which among the four had shown the greatest nobility of character.

¹ The story is confused. It should be Bīrbal's son who acts as described. The king is also similarly confused with his son.

BĒLDĀRĪ.

Bēldār literally means one who works with the bēl or mattock. It is a general term for the aggregate of low Hindū tribes who make their living by earth work. The number of Bēldārs returned at the Census of 1911 was as follows :—

Bengal	9,294
Bihar and Orissa	88,912
Bombay	12,398
Central Provinces and Berar	25,616
United Provinces	39,035
Central India Agency	26,378
Elsewhere	3,787
TOTAL	205,420

The majority of these Bēldārs probably speak the same dialect as their surroundings. According to Sir Herbert Risley the Bēldārs of Bihar and Western Bengal form a separate wandering caste of Dravidian origin. The same is perhaps also the case in some other districts. The word Bēldār is accordingly used in two different senses denoting sometimes a distinct caste, sometimes all low caste earth-workers. It is impossible to decide how many of the Bēldārs enumerated at the last Census in the various provinces belong to either group.

During the preliminary operations of this Survey a dialect called Bēldārī was returned from Rajputana, Berar and Bombay. The estimated numbers of speakers were as follows :—

Rajputana, Jaisalmir State	100
Berar—
Amraoti	800
Ellichpur	500
Buldana	585
	1,885
Bombay Presidency—
Thana	2,550
Satara	350
Satara Agency, State Anudh	15
“ “ State Phaltan	40
Kolhapur State	50
Southern Maratha Jaghirs	200
	3,155
TOTAL	5,140

The returns of the last Census do not furnish us with materials for checking these figures.

Specimens of the so-called Bēldārī have been received from Ellichpur and Buldana, from the Jaisalmir State, and from the Ramdurg State. Though the dialect differs in the different districts, being more or less influenced by the prevailing languages, there are some characteristic features which recur everywhere, and it is accordingly possible to speak of a separate dialect. Bēldārī is not, however, a fixed form of speech with consistent features. Like Ōḍkī it is a mixture. The prevailing elements are Marāṭhī and Eastern Rājasthānī. To the former language belongs forms such as the plurals bēṭē, sons (Ramdurg); nāḍē, tanks (Jaisalmir); daūs, to a father (Buldana); maṇsān, to a man (Ramdurg); danāt, in days (Ramdurg); the oblique bases in ā of weak nouns such as dishā-sū, from a direction (Jaisalmir); uthand-panā-sē, in riotousness (Ellichpur); the genitive termination chā in the Jaisalmir and Ramdurg specimens, the common termination lā of the past tense, and so forth. Rājasthānī elements are forms of strong bases such as pōryā, sons; chhōṭō, small (Ellichpur); ghōṛō, horse (Jaisalmir) (but also kuttā, dog; compare also ghōṛē, horses; ghōṛiyā, mares); the dative suffixes -nē (Amraoti, Ramdurg, Jaisalmir); -nā, nū (Jaisalmir); -kē (Buldana) and -ku (Ellichpur); compare Mālvi -nē, -kē, -kū; the genitive suffix -kō, -kā, -kī (Ellichpur, Buldana); compare Mēwātī, Jaipuri and Mālvi -kō, -kī; the ablative suffixes -sē and -sū; compare Mālvi -sē, -sū; the past tense in yō, ō, which is used side by side with forms in -lā; forms such as marū, I die; kahū, I may say (Ellichpur); marē-hē, I am dying (Jaisalmir); kahus, I shall say (Buldana) and so forth.

It would also be possible to compare some of the l-forms of the past with Ōṛiyā, and the common mōr, mōra, my, mine, seems connected with forms in Eastern languages. It is accordingly likely that there is also an admixture of Eastern vernaculars. The chief components of Bēldārī are, however, of the same kind as in Ōḍkī. With that form of speech there are also other points of agreement; thus the pronoun tudā, thy; conjunctive participles such as kartī, having done, and so forth. Note the curious form mērē-ku, me, an idiom frequent in Dakhinī Hindōsthānī, and also finding parallels in Eastern languages, as in the Bihārī hamarā-kē, with the same meaning.

It would, however, be waste of time and paper to go further into details. The general character of this mixed form of speech will be sufficiently apparent from the specimens which follow. The first is the beginning of a version of the Parable from Ellichpur. It will be seen that the Rājasthānī element is rather strong in the Bēldārī of Ellichpur.

Specimens have also been received from the Jaisalmir State, and two of them will be printed below. The first is a song sung by Bēldārs in the rainy season; the second a hymn which they recite in the early mornings and especially at the Hōlī festival. The Bēldārī of Jaisalmir is of the same kind as that illustrated in the preceding pages. Forms such as māṇsā-chē, of a man; dēsū-chē, of a country; Rāmā-chē, of God; kuttā, a dog, occur in other Jaisalmir specimens. The general nature of the Bēldārī of the State is, however, well illustrated by the two short specimens which follow.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Dark clouds have been overhanging, and the rain has come. Tanks and reservoirs and also the Bhīm tank are filled.

A woman went with seven friends to fetch water from the tank. The seven friends returned home after having filled their pots, and she remained alone at the tank.

Meanwhile a man riding on a camel arrived from the west and said to her :—

‘The other girls have put collyrium in their eyes and ornaments on their foreheads. Why is your dress dirty?’

(She replied—)

‘The other ones have got their husbands at home, but mine is abroad.’

(Then he said—)

‘Throw the water pot into the tank, and come along with me.’

(She replied—)

‘I shall burn your tongue and put Sambhar salt on it.’

(She then returned home and said to her mother-in-law—)

‘A camel sōwār said to me, O mother-in-law, “come along with me.”’

(The mother-in-law asked—)

‘How did he look and what were his features like?’

(She replied—)

‘He had the beauty of my brother-in-law and the features of my husband’s sister.’

(On this the mother-in-law rebuked her and said—)

‘I shall burn your tongue, he was thy own husband.’

Having arisen, Rāma came, embracing his brother Bharata. Rāma came, having arisen, and embraced him.

Having extended their arms both brothers embraced, and their eyes filled with tears.

(Bharata asked): ‘Will you not relate, O brother, the tales of the forest; what kind of troubles you had to undergo?’

(Rāma said): ‘The fruits of the forest I ate, and the leaves of the forest I used as bed. Such troubles have I endured.’

The Bēldārī of the Ramdurg State seems to be of a similar kind, though the Marāṭhī element is somewhat stronger. It will be sufficient to print the beginning of a version of the Parable as illustration.

ŌDKĪ.

The Ōds are a wandering tribe who are found all over India. In Kathiawar they are pond diggers; in the Panjab they take small contracts on roads, canals, railways, and the like, and also build houses and dig tanks or wells. In Mathura they weave coarse cloth. In the South they cut out stones from the earth, convey them on their carts to where they are wanted, dig tanks and wells and so on. The number of Ōds returned at the Census of 1911 was 610,162 distributed as follows:—

Madras	550,109
Panjab	32,246
United Provinces	9,071
Rajputana Agency	7,839
Elsewhere	10,897
TOTAL	610,162

The root meaning of the word ōḍ is uncertain. In the South it takes the form ōḍa, and the Rev. F. Kittel compares Telugu ōḍde, drudgery, ōḍdevāṇḍlu, tank diggers. As most Ōds belong to the South, it is very probable that the word is originally Dravidian, and connected with the name of the Vaḍaras.

The majority of the Ōds, or about 600,000, are found in South India and are stated to speak a patois of Telugu. We have not sufficient information about the dialect of the remaining Ōds. As a separate form of speech it has only been returned from Muzaffargarh in the Panjab, and from Cutch, Panch Mahals, Hyderabad and Thar and Parkar in the Bombay Presidency. The estimated number of speakers according to information collected for the purposes of this Survey was:—

Panjab	514
Muzaffargarh	514
Bombay Presidency	2,300
Cutch	250
Panch Mahals	50
Hyderabad	1,500
Thar and Parkar	500
TOTAL	2,814

Specimens of Ōdkī have, however, also been forwarded from the Dhandhuka town in Ahmedabad District (in Bombay), and a list of words hailing from Shikarpur (in the Panjab), which will not be reproduced below, shows that the Ōds of that district speak the same language as their namesakes farther south. If we except the Dravidian South it is therefore probable that Mr. Baines was right in stating¹ that 'the earth-workers called Od or Waddar carry a language of their own from Peshawar to the sea, using a vocabulary less and less Dravidian as the tribe frequents tracts farther away from the East Deccan, from whence it probably originated.' The Ōds were probably from the beginning Dravidians and spoke a form of Telugu. Later on, we are not able to say when, a comparatively numerous section seems to have spent a considerable time in a locality where the prevailing languages were Marāṭhī, Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. It is of interest to note that the Ōḍs of Northern India are only found in the west, from the United Provinces to Sind. So far as we know their language everywhere contains a strong Marāṭhī element, and it seems likely that their North Indian home must have been in North-Western Dekhan. According to the returns at the Census of 1901,¹ their distribution in the Bombay Presidency was as follows :—

¹ Census of India, 1891. General Report. London, 1893, p. 137.

Ahmedabad	1,266
Broach	715
Kaira	805
Panch Mahals	461
Surat	53
Cambay	200
Cutch	188
Kathiawar	959
Mahikantha	106
Palaupur	491
Rewa Kantha	385
Karachi	201
Hyderabad	1,549
Shikarpur	1,338
Thar and Parkar	1,449
Upper Sind Frontier	127
Khairpur	278
TOTAL	10,571

It will be seen that the Ōḍs were practically restricted to districts where Gujarātī and Sindhī are the prevailing languages. The existence of a strong Marāṭhī element in Ōḍkī can only be explained under the supposition that these Ōḍs have come from some place farther east, say in the hills bordering the Marāṭhī area. Such a localisation would also agree with the fact that the Ōḍs of Southern India speak Telugu.

The specimens of Ōḍkī printed below, and the Standard List of Words and Sentences on pp. 178ff. will give a good idea of the nature of the dialect. It will be seen that it is a mixed form of speech containing elements taken from different sources. As in the case of the Gipsy language of Europe these elements are important as showing the route by which the tribe must have wandered. They are, however, to a great extent so perspicuous that it is unnecessary to enter upon a detailed discussion. It will be sufficient to draw attention to some of the most important features. The Marāṭhī element is particularly strong. Thus the neuter of strong bases ends in ē or ẽ as in Marāṭhī; compare talẽ, tank; kẽlẽ, it was said. Strong masculine bases end in ā, plural ẽ; thus, ghōrā, horse; ghōrẽ, horses. Note also the oblique bases in ō of weak and ẽ of strong masculine bases, and in ī of feminine bases; thus, dēsā-mā, in a country; lerkẽ-chẽ, of a man; malkatī-chā, of the property. The termination chā, chī, chẽ of the genitive is important. The same is the case with the termination lā of the past tense of verbs; thus, gẽlā, went; mārlā, struck. Compare further the imperative plural in ā; thus, āwā, come; the infinitives in ũ and ṇẽ; thus, kẽhũ, to say; mārṇẽ, to strike, and so forth. Such forms are found in all the specimens, and they gain in importance when we remember that they all hail from districts where Marāṭhī is not a home tongue of the population.

Several of the usual terminations in Ôḍḱĭ do not agree with Marāṭhī but with Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. Such are the suffixes ē of the agent and nē of the dative, both of which are also found in Mālvi; the ablative in tī; the locative in mā; forms such as hē, I (compare Gujarātī, Mālvi and Mārwarī hē); chhē, sē and hē, is; the conjunctive participle is tīnē (Gujarātī īnē) and so forth. The Gujarātī element is strongest in Gujarātī districts such as the Panch Mahals and Ahmedabad, but is also apparent in other districts.

Features borrowed from languages other than Marāṭhī and Gujarātī have more of a local character. The locative termination māy, which is prevalent in Mārwarī is, however, common in the Ahmedabad District, where Gujarātī is the chief language. Of such local borrowings I may mention the common cerebralisation of a ḍ in Cutch and in the districts of Hyderabad, Thar and Parkar, Shikarpur and Muzaffargarh; the Pañjābī dative termination nū in the same districts with the exception of Cutch, and other sporadic instances of borrowings from the local dialects. They will be easily ascertained from the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable from the Panch Mahals. It represents a dialect which can be characterized as Gujarātī with a Marāṭhī substructure.

The next specimen is a popular tale about Jāsmā who, according to the Rās Mālā,¹ came from Malwa with a number of Ōḍis in order to dig the Sahasralīṅg Lake at Patan for Siddh Rāj. Siddhrāj Jaisingh said to Jāsmā, 'dig a tank in one day and fill it with water during the night.' She said that she would be able to do so on the third day. Then Jāsmā went to the Virgin River¹ and besought her with folded hands to free her from this great distress. The Virgin said, 'I shall come, but you must not look behind.' At daybreak the Virgin filled the tank. Then Siddhrāo came to Jāsmā and joined her. Jāsmā asked him to turn back, in accordance with his position, but Siddhrāo said that he would not desist from pursuing her. Then the woman said to Mother Earth, 'O mother, if I am a chaste woman, let me be united with you.' Then the Earth came close to her. Siddhrāo raised a cry and said, 'thou art my sister.' Jāsmā said, 'thy sin is forgiven, but thy progeny shall not remain.' Then Jāsmā went to Khalikholwad² and joined the Ōḍs. Afterwards she joined her hands and said to the Sun, 'I have done with life, but do not grant to any Ōḍ girl as much beauty as there is on my last finger.'

According to specimens forwarded from the Cutch State the Ōḍs there use a form of speech of the same kind as that illustrated in the preceding pages. We may only note the frequent cerebralisation of a dental d; thus, ḍēwā, give; ḍāḍī, grandmother; ḍī, day.

¹ A name of the river Sarasvatī, which is so called because its water is lost in the desert and does not join the Ocean.

‘Come and take a seat. Welcome. Whence are you coming?’
 ‘I am coming from Chapreri.’
 ‘You must have been much troubled by the rain. Shall I make a fire for you? If you will warm yourself for a time, you will feel comfortable. What food may I order for you?’
 ‘I do not now want any food.’

 ‘Just now I am thirsty. Give me water to drink.’
 ‘Shall I put your clothes a little while in the sun to dry?’
 ‘Yes, if you please.’

 ‘If that be your wish, get it prepared.’
 ‘Are all well in your house?’
 ‘All are well, only my grandmother died the day before yesterday.’
 ‘What was the matter with her?’
 ‘She had fever for four days.’
 ‘How are the crops in your field?’
 ‘There was not much rain this year, and so I have not got much.’
 ‘What did you pay for these bullocks?’
 ‘I paid four hundred and fifty kōris.’
 ‘Will you sell these bullocks?’
 ‘I will if you give a good price.’
 ‘I will pay three hundred kōris.’
 ‘How can they be sold for three hundred kōris?’
 ‘I think the bullocks are old, and so it is a good price.’
 ‘In what month are you going to have your daughter married?’
 ‘I shall do so after the ceremony of the first anniversary of my grandmother’s death is over.’
 ‘Rest in our house to-night.’
 ‘No, I have to reach Dharang by sunset.’
 ‘Come to our house some other day.’
 ‘Very well. Adieu. I am off now.’
 ‘Give my compliments to all in your house.’

The dialect of the Ōḍs of Hyderabad and of Thar and Parkar is said to be identical. The same is the case in Shikarpur, and it will be sufficient to print a short specimen, the deposition of a villager in a case of assault, as illustrating the speech of the Ōḍs of all three districts. It will be seen that the influence of Sindhī, the prevailing language of the districts, is easily recognisable. Compare rāti-jō, of the night; ghōr-karaṇu, house-doing, hawking; mājō, my, and so on. The Pañjābī termination of the dative nũ has already been mentioned; compare khurī-nũ, to the heel. An unpublished Standard List of Words and Sentences contains forms of an h future, viz. mārhē, I shall, thou wilt, he will, beat; plur. 1. mārhũ, 2. mārhā, 3. mārhē. Similarly we find tāphā, you will warm yourself, in the specimen from the Cutch State printed above. These forms seem to be comparable with the Mārwarī future. In this connexion I may also note the Rājasthānī negative particle kōnī, not (lit. kō-nī, not at all); compare kāhi ūē-nā kō-dinā-nī, anybody him-to not gave; kō-dēlā-nī, didst not give.

I make the following statement upon my oath. My name is Hashū and my father's name is Thadā. I am a Hindū by religion, and I am a Lohānā. My profession is hawking. My age is forty years. I am a resident of Hyderabad town, Haiderabad ta'lūqa, Hyderabad District. My complaint is against Wasanmal. Last night at one o'clock I went to the abode of a faqīr. On my way home I passed a curds-seller's shop, and there I bought some curds. There the accused came and stumbled against my right heel. 'Why,' said I, 'are you blind?' Then he began to pour out abuse against my wife and daughter, and after threatening to beat me he prepared to fight. I became afraid and stood far off. Hōtū, Nārū and Rījhū intervened, and then the accused desisted. Else he would have struck me. I never before had any enmity with accused.

Specimens of Ōḍkī have also been received from Muzaffargarh, and a short popular tale from that district is printed below. It will be seen that in the main it agrees with the Ōḍkī illustrated in the preceding pages. The cerebralisation of d in ḍō, two, etc., and forms such as mahā-kan, from me, point in the direction of Sindhī. There are also some Pañjābī reminiscences such as raṇḍē-nū, to the wife; bā-dā, of a father. On the whole, however, the Ōḍkī of Muzaffargarh is of the same kind as in the Gujarātī districts,—a mixture of Marāṭhī and Gujarātī-Rājasthānī. The form huttā, was, which does not occur in other specimens, is comparable to Marāṭhī hōtā.

There was once a King. He had no offspring in his house. One day he left his kingdom and sat down at the roadside as a faqīr near a smouldering fire. One day a group of faqīrs came along and asked him why he was sitting there on the road. The King replied, 'do not ask me any question.' The faqīrs said they would ask. The King said that he had no offspring in his house. The faqīrs said, 'take two tapāsās. Eat one yourself and get your wife to eat the other. She will bring forth a son, with a moon on his forehead and a star on his little finger.' Subsequently a son was born in the palace. The King had two wives, and the son was born in the eldest wife's house. The second wife told the midwife to kill the child. The midwife brought a basket full of coal and put it near her. She then took the child and put it on a heap of manure. The King was told that his wife had given birth to coal. The King's bitch was standing there. She carried the child off and put it in her own pit. After the lapse of one or two years the younger queen was informed that the child had been heard to cry, and she again ordered it to be killed. The bitch heard this, took the child and entrusted it to a bloody horse. The child grew up and the King learnt about him. He brought him home, made great rejoicings and gave much alms.

LĀDĪ.

The Lāds are a Gipsy tribe, who sell betel-leaf, areca-nuts, tobacco, bhang, etc. The number of Lāds returned at the last Census of 1911 was as follows :—

Bombay	11,781
Central Provinces and Berar	5,383
Baroda State	8,500
Hyderabad State	8,776
Elsewhere	1,132
TOTAL	35,572

It does not seem as if the Lāds generally have got a dialect of their own. During the preliminary operations of this Survey a dialect called Lāḍī was reported to be spoken by 500 individuals in the Ellichpur District of Berar. A version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son has been forwarded as an illustration of this form of speech. The beginning of it, which follows, shows that the Lāḍī of Ellichpur is Eastern Rājasthānī, in most respects agreeing with Jaipurī.

SĀSĪ.

The Sāsīs are one of the best known criminal tribes. They commonly use the word bhattū (in the Panjab) or bhātū (Saharanpur) to denote themselves. I cannot suggest any etymology of this name, which is also used by other Gipsy tribes such as the Kōlhātīs. The common denomination Sāsī is replaced by the longer form Sāsiyā in the United Provinces. It has been variously derived from Sanskrit śvāsa, breathing, or from the base *sram*s, to fall, to get loose. The former explanation does not give much sense, the latter would perhaps convey the meaning of a fallen, degraded caste, and etymologically sāsī might well be derived from an old participle sramsita. Others derive the word from śvagaṇika, accompanied by a pack of hounds, hunter, or from śvapāka, who cooks dogs, out-caste, but these derivations are not possible phonetically. If we consider the fact that the Sāsīs often act as bards, it would also be possible to derive their name from a Sanskrit śāmsika = śamsin, reciting.

Sāsīs are most numerous in the Panjab, especially in the districts of Gurdaspur, Amritsar, Lahore, Gujranwala, Sialkot and Gujrat. The total number returned at the last Census of 1911 was 32,481, distributed as follows :—

Panjab	26,990
Delhi Division	3,357
Jullundur Division	1,893
Lahore Division	14,574
Rawalpindi Division	2,090
Multan Division	1,993
Native States	3,083
Other Provinces	5,491
TOTAL	32,481

It is probable that many of these Sāsīs speak the language of their neighbours. Our information about the number of those who speak a separate dialect is very defective. This is partly due to the fact that there are in reality two different things which can be called the Sāsī dialect. In the first place we have a distinct vernacular, specimens of which have only been forwarded from the Panjab. In the second place there is a criminal argot characterised by certain methods of disguising ordinary words so as to make them unintelligible to the uninitiated. Such methods can be applied to words taken from any dialect. Moreover, the returns from the Census of 1911 do not distinguish between the different Gipsy dialects. They seem, however, to show that many Sāsīs have been returned as speaking other dialects. Thus the total number returned for Gipsy languages from the Panjab was only 5,640. The information collected for the purposes of this Survey, on the other hand, must in this case be used with considerable caution. It gives the number of speakers in Ferozepur as 45,000, but only 360 Sāsīs were enumerated in the district at the Census of 1911. The details of this information are as follows :—

Panjab	48,170
Ferozepur	45,000
Gurdaspur	2,000
Gujrat	1,170
United Provinces	3,380
Saharanpur	3,000
Kheri	380
TOTAL	51,550

It will be seen that this total is considerably more than the number of Sāsīs enumerated in the whole of India in 1911.

The Sāsīs are to a great extent migratory, and their dialect differs according to locality. Thus the Sāsīs of the United Provinces apparently speak Hindōstānī, while the dialect of their cousins in the Northern Panjab is closely related to Pañjābī. A consequence of their migratory habits is also the use of forms and suffixes belonging to different vernaculars by the same Sāsīs. Thus in the dialect spoken in the Northern Panjab we find the genitive formed by adding a suffix *gā*¹ or kā as in Hindōstānī, while the suffix of the ablative is thō, which reminds us of Gujarātī. Dr. Grahame Bailey has shown that there are numerous cases of correspondence now with one, now with another Aryan dialect in the speech of the Sāsīs of the Northern Panjab. It might be characterised as intermediate between Pañjābī and Hindōstānī. Such correspondence in grammar cannot, however, prove more than that the Sāsīs have associated much with peoples speaking those tongues. It is quite certain that the stronghold of the tribe is the north of the Panjab, between the Sutlej and the Jhelum. Some phonetical features in Sāsī also point in that direction. Thus the old double consonants, which are so common in the Prakrits, are treated differently in modern vernaculars. They are often retained and a preceding short vowel remains short in Pañjābī, while they are simplified and the preceding vowel lengthened in Hindōstānī and most Eastern languages. Compare Prakrit ekka, one, Pañjābī ikk, but Hindōstānī ēk; Prakrit piṭṭhī, back, Pañjābī piṭṭh, but Hindōstānī pīṭh. The Sāsī of the Panjab here marches with Pañjābī; compare ékki, one; nákk, nose; háth, hand; piṭṭh, back. In the United Provinces we usually find forms with simplified compounds and long vowels. In Saharanpur, however, we find forms such as miṭ, back; kanṭhā, ear; kuk, eye, etc., which seem to show that the state of affairs is not quite the same as in Hindōstānī. The conditions in Sāsī do not therefore prove anything. More importance must be attached to the existence of a cerebral l and a cerebral n in Sāsī, for the use of those sounds is characteristic of western languages, such as Marāṭhī, Gujarātī, Rājasthānī and Pañjābī. Such cases of correspondence between Pañjābī and Sāsī are exactly what we would expect, considering where the stronghold of the Sāsīs is situated. The use of an oblique form ending in ā of weak nouns, on the other hand, seems to show that there is in Sāsī an element, a substratum, which does not belong to the Panjab, but rather more to the south, where we approach the Rājasthānī and Marāṭhī areas.

We are comparatively well informed about the Sāsī dialect of the Northern Panjab, which has been dealt with by Dr. Grahame Bailey. The remarks which follow refer to it.

Vowels are pronounced as in Pañjābī. Short vowels are sometimes so shortened as to be almost slurred. I have indicated this short pronunciation by means of the sign [˘]; thus, bappā-gṽ, to the father. A short vowel before an old double consonant in monosyllabic words becomes half long, but usually remains short if new syllables are added; thus, ákkh, eye; kánn, ear; bápp, father, but bappā-gā, of a father. I have marked this semi-length by adding an accent above the vowel. The same accent is used with the sign of lengthening in forms such as āṭā, coming; chugāṇē, to graze; chātā, wishing. In that case it denotes a peculiar lengthening of a long vowel, which has no parallel in Pañjābī. A similar lengthening of an i or u occurs in forms such as kīyyā, done; dīyyā, given; hūwā, become, when the vowel is followed by a double y or w, respectively. The pronunciation of consonants is said to agree with Pañjābī. The principal point in which the two differ from Hindōstānī refers to aspirated letters in the beginning of syllables, the aspiration of such words being very guttural, almost like the Arabic ‘ain. This rule applies to h, gh, jh, dh, dh, bh, nh and mh. Thus, hūwā, become, is almost ‘ūwā; ghōṛā, horse, is almost g‘ōṛā, and so forth.

There are two genders, the masculine which is also used as a neuter, and the feminine. The oblique base of masculine nouns ending in i, ū and consonants, and of feminine nouns ends in ā, their case of the agent in ē. The nominative plural is like the singular in the case of masculine nouns, while feminines end in ā. The oblique plural ends in ē. Masculine nouns ending in ā change their ā to ē in the oblique case, to ē in the case of the agent, to ē in the nominative plural and to ē in the oblique plural. The common case suffixes are,— dative gũ; ablative thō; and genitive gā, feminine gī, plural gīā. The usual Hindōstānī suffixes dative kō, ablative sē, genitive kā, kī, are used instead in the specimens received from Gujrat, Gurdaspur and Sialkot, and in the United Provinces the inflexion of nouns is the same as in Hindōstānī. According to Dr. Bailey the nominative, genitive and the case of the agent of bápp, father; kūtā, dog; and dhīā, daughter, are as follows :—

	Singular.			Plural.
Genitive . . .	báppā-gā	kūtē-gā	dhīā-gā	báppē-gā	kūtē-gā	dhīē-gā
Agent . . .	báppē	kūtē	dhīē	báppē-ōṇō	kūtē-ōṇō	dhīē-ōṇō

These are apparently the regular forms in the dialect of the Sāsīs of the Northern Panjab. They are not, however, the only ones. Thus, a list of words received from the Gujrat District contains forms such as waḍḍiā-dē pās, to fathers, with the common Panjābī genitive suffix.

Pronouns.

The following are the regular forms of the personal pronouns :—

	I.	We.	Thou.	You.
Nominative	haũ	ham	taũ	tam
Agent	maĩ	hamō	tuĩ	tamō
Dat.-Accusative	manũ	ham-kō	tanũ	tam-kō
Ablative	mēsthō	ham-thō	tēsthē	tam-thō
Genitive	mērā	mā rā	tērā	tuhārā

The demonstrative pronouns are ēā, this, oblique base in, case of the agent singular in, plural inō; uh, ōh, that, oblique base un, case of the agent singular un, plural unō. There is also a pronoun tiārgā, the thing or subject under discussion, which is substituted for nouns in order to prevent a stranger from understanding what is meant.

The common verb substantive is hōṇā, to be. Its present participle is hōtā, being, and its conjunctive participle hōikē, having been. The present tense is formed as follows :—

Verbs.

Singular	1. haĩ .	Plural	1. hā .
	2. haĩ .		2. hō .
	3. hai .		3. haĩ .

The past tense is singular masc. thīyyā, fem. thīyyī; plural masc. thīyyē, fem. thīyyīā: or sīyyā, fem. sīyyī; plural masc. sīyyē, fem. sīyyīā.

The verb substantive is largely used in the conjugation of ordinary verbs.

Present Time.—The old present is conjugated like the present tense of the verb substantive; thus, haũ mārē, I may beat; baṛē, he may enter; khāhā, we may eat. The present tense is formed by adding the present of the verb substantive to the present participle; thus, ham mārē hā, we are beating, we beat. Several compound tenses are used as a habitual present. Such are haũ mārā hōtā haĩ, I am being beaten; haũ mārā kartā haĩ, I am doing beating; haũ mārī rihā haĩ, I having beaten have remained.

Past Time.—The ordinary past tense is identical with the past participle passive; thus, haũ gayā, I went; tam gaē, you went. The past tense of transitive verbs is a passive form, and the subject is put in the case of the agent; thus, hamō mārā, by us beaten, we beat. Similarly also maĩ mārā thīyyā (or sīyyā), by me beaten was, I had beaten. Other forms of the past such as haũ mārā thīyyā, I was beating, are of course constructed actively.

Future.—The suffix of the future is gṛā, preceded by an ñ in the first and second persons singular and the first and third persons plural. The regular future forms of mārṇā, to beat, are :—

Singular	1. mārāṅṛā	Plural	1. mārāṅṛē
	2. mārāṅṛā		2. mārāṅṛē
	3. mārāṅṛā		3. mārāṅṛē

and mārāṅ, indeclinable for singular and plural.

Similar forms are found in Maṇḍeālī, Sukēṭī and Bilaspūrī. Compare Maṇḍeālī mārāṅ or mārghā, I shall beat; Bilaspūrī mārāṅṛā, I shall beat.

Imperative.—The imperative is formed as in Pañjābī and Hindōstānī; thus, mār, beat; mārō, beat ye.

Infinitive and Participles.—The suffix of the infinitive is ṇā; thus, mārṇā, to beat. Compare Pañjābī ṇā, nā, Hindōstānī nā, Sindhī ṇu. The present participle ends in tā as in Hindōstānī; thus, mārā, beating. The past participle is generally formed as in Pañjābī; thus, mārā, beaten; kahiā, said; though Hindōstānī forms, such as gayā, gone, also occur. The conjunctive participle ends in ī, ī-kē; thus, jāī, having gone; mārī-kē, having beaten. As in the suffix of the genitive the k is often softened to g; thus, āī-gē, having come; dēhkī-gē, having seen.

Passive Voice.—Passive forms agree with Pañjābī and Hindōstānī; thus, haũ mārā jattā haĩ, I am beaten; haũ mārā jattā thīyyā (sīyyā), I was beaten; haũ mārā jāṅṛā, I shall be beaten.

The two specimens which follow illustrate the ordinary dialect of the Sāsīs in Northern Panjab. I owe them to the kindness of Dr. T. Grahame Bailey.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Two of our saints were going along. They went to a village to beg and asked a female Jatt for milk, but she did not give it. When they went away, her milk was transformed into blood. Seeing that the milk had been changed to blood, the Jatt woman ran after them. They said to her, 'go home, little one, thy milk will be as before.' When she came home and saw it, then the milk had become as it used to be.

Those two saints did a miracle. One of them dug up an iguana with his elbow, cooked it, and ate it. Then he said to the other one, 'I have dug it up, and now thou restore it to life.' Then he put the bones together, waved his hand and said, 'go, little one, run away.' Then it ran away and became alive again. The names of those two saints were Bhalād Bhagat and Malaṅg, and Bhalād Bhagat was Malaṅg's maternal uncle.

The dialect spoken by the Sāsīs of the United Provinces is not so well known. Specimens have been received from Saharanpur and Kheri. They seem to show that the Sāsīs speak the same language as their neighbours. They are much less numerous than in the Panjab, and conditions are not favourable for preserving a strange dialect. It will be sufficient to give a short specimen, received from Kheri, as an illustration of the speech of the Sāsīs, or Sāsiyās, as they are here called, of the United Provinces. It is practically Hindōstānī. It is, of course, likely enough that other Sāsiyās speak a dialect more closely related to that illustrated in the preceding pages.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In the winter I had been tending cattle. The sub-inspector demanded ten rupees from me, and as I had not got them I was seized and sent to Meerut, where I was put in prison. Afterwards I was released and sent to Sultanpur, where I remained for four years, beating muñja and Rām reeds (for basket work). I said to the Munshi, ‘I have a petition. Write that I may be settled in some other place.’ The lord gave order that I might go thence and be settled in the jungle. I came to the jungle, and there I took one month’s leave and went to see my son.

The specimens printed above illustrate the ordinary dialect of the Sāsīs, especially that spoken in Northern Panjab. As we have seen it mainly agrees with Pañjābī in phonology, while its inflexional forms are intermediate between that language and Hindōstānī ; some of the case suffixes being identical with those used in the latter form of speech. I have already mentioned that this partial agreement with Hindōstānī can very well be a consequence of the migratory life of the Sāsīs. At present most of them live in Government Reservations and in circumstances which are not favourable for the preservation of the purity of their dialect.

Criminal Sāsī.

Formerly their condition was different. In the words of Abdul Ghafur, 'they are professional thieves and very brave.' In order to be able to converse with each other without being understood by outsiders, they have, like other criminal tribes, in addition to their real dialect, devised a criminal variation, an argot or 'thieves' Latin' which they themselves call Fārsī, Persian.

This is not, however, a different dialect, but identical with the common speech in phonology and grammar. Moreover, it is not known to all Sāsīs, young children being unacquainted with it. It is based on the ordinary dialect and consists in changing individual words so as to make them unrecognizable. As in the case of European argots, it contains a number of peculiar words, probably picked up from various sources, most of which cannot so far be satisfactorily explained. Dr. Bailey has published a long list of them. Many of them are well-known Aryan words. Others such as kūkaṛ, cock, are onomatopœic. Several are based on some metaphor, as is often the case in European argots. Compare gōlī, poison used for putting into the food of cultivators' cattle, lit. pill ; charāwā, advocate, lit. herdsman ; khurā, lower part of leg, lit. hoof. Some words are also apparently borrowed from other languages ; thus, bārmī, woman, wife, might be compared with Sherpa permi ; nād, village, with Kanarese nāḍu, country, Gōṇḍī nār, village ; lallī, night, with Arabic laila. The greatest portion of the vocabulary of Criminal Sāsī, however, consists of common words changed or disguised in various ways.

The letters of a word are often transposed. Thus we find kābrā instead of bakrā, goat ; khūm perhaps instead of mukh, face ; chōmī instead of mōchī, shoemaker ; chhāmī instead of māchhī, a certain water-carrying caste ; ṭēp instead of pēt, belly ; ṭiph instead of piṭṭh, back ; bakat instead of batak, duck, and so on.

The most common device of disguising words is, however, to add a syllable in front, and this addition often entirely supersedes the beginning of the word. Thus the ordinary Sāsī word for 'ten' is das. By adding kha in front we get khadas and finally khas, both of which are used in Criminal Sāsī. Similarly we find bāl, khābāl and chhābāl, hair ; pair, khapair, chhapair and nhair, foot, and so forth. The usual additions of this kind which occur in the materials at my disposal are as follows :—

k added before vowels. With a following a it becomes ku, kó, with a following ā kō ; thus, kukkhī, Pañjābī akkhī, eye ; kókkh, Pañjābī akkh, eye ; kundar and andar, inside ; kuggē, Pañjābī aggē, in front of ; kōṭṭā and āṭā, flour ; kōṭh = āṭh, eight ; kōdmī = ādmī, man ; kōnnā = ānā, anna.

kh is also sometimes added before vowels ; thus, khassī = assī, eighty ; khūpar = āpar, above. More commonly, however, we find the syllable kha added before words beginning with consonants ; thus, khatin, three ; khadand, tooth ; khadas, ten ; khanāk, nose ; khanaū, nine ; khapair, foot ; khamai, by me ; kharājū, Pañjābī rājī, pleased. The additional syllable kha then often supersedes the initial syllable of the word ; thus, khuntā, an iron and wood instrument for digging, cf. Hindōstānī gaintū ; khās=das, ten ; khaū=nau, nine ; khákk=nákk, nose ; khigalṇā=nikalnā, to come out ; khīs=bīs, twenty ; khūh=mūh, mouth ; khikhṇā=likhnā, to write ; khōth=hāth, hand.

g is apparently used in a similar way, though I have not found more than one certain instance, viz. gupāhī=sipāhī, soldier.

ch only occurs as a substitute for b ; thus, chatāṇā=batānā, to show ; chōlī=bōlī, speech. It is, however, possible that it can be used instead of other labials. Thus, chaī, water, may be for pānī ; compare Kōlhaṭī chēnī. In Western Pahlāṭī, however, we find a similar word chīs, water.

chh is quite common ; thus, chhakān=kānn, ear ; chhapair=pair, foot ; chhabārmī=bārmī, woman ; chhabāptā and bāptā, father ; chhabhautā and bhautā, brother ; chhabhaiṇ and bhāṇ, sister. This chh often replaces the initial consonant ; thus, chhūt, chhapūt and pūt, son ; chhauht=bahut, much ; chhattū=bhattū, a Sāsī man ; chhāhar=bāhar, outside ; chhalak=balak, tomorrow ; chhūhā=būhā, door ; chhaiṇṇā=waiṇṇā, calf. In all these instances the original word begins with a labial, and Dr. Bailey restricts the change to such words as begin with b, and that is no doubt usually the case. In the materials received from Gurdaspur and Sialkot, however, we also find forms such as chhakānn, ear ; chhangāh=gunāh, sin ; chhaghar, house ; chhaurat, woman ; chhakaun, who ? chhakyā, what ? chhagadhā, ass, and so forth.

j and jh are used in the same way as ch and chh ; thus, jadā=barā, big ; jhūkhā and chhūkhā=bhūkhā, hungry.

ḍh is comparatively frequent ; thus, ḍhagal=gal, neck ; ḍhanērē=nērē, near ; ḍhabāṇ=bāṇ, sister ; ḍhabāptā=bāptā, father ; ḍhamulk=mulk, country. In ḍhāmā, village, ḍh seems to have superseded an old g. D in ḍimṇā=jimnā, to eat, is used in a similar way.

n is a common substitute for various sounds ; thus, nālī=chālī, forty ; nōrī=chōrī, theft ; niṇṇiyā=chiriyā, bird ; neōklā=chhōkrā, boy ; nikat=ṭikat, ticket ; nōmbū=ṭōmbū, a house-breaking instrument ; naukhṇā=dēkhṇā, see ; nañj=pañj, five ; naṇhnā=paṇhnā, read ; nūchhṇā=pūchhṇā, ask ; nair=pair, foot ; nāgg=pāgg, turban ; nēt=pēt, belly ; nōhal=bōhal, heap of grain ; nāllī=lāllī, night ; nadhūk=ṣandūq, box ; nāhb=sāhb, ṣāhib ; naihr=shahr, city ; nūraj or nhūraj=sūraj, sun ; nāth=sāth, with.

nh is often substituted for aspirated letters and for s ; thus, nhē=chhē, six ; nhōḍṇā=chhōḍṇā, leave ; nhōllē=chhōllē, gram ; nhik=ṭhik, right ; nhāṇā=thānā, police station ; nhālī=thālī, brass vessel ; nhitṭā=phitṭā, abuse ; nhat=sat, seven ; nhir=sir, head ; nhikṇā=sikhṇā, learn ; nhīs=sīs, head, and so forth.

p does not seem to be much used in this way. I have found it in pōdnā=chōdnā, to have sexual intercourse with, and perhaps in pīngī, fire ; pīrl, oil, etc.

b is often prefixed to words beginning with vowels, thus, bēā=ēā, this; biw=iw, now; bōt̥hē=ōt̥hē, there; baur=aur, and; bēk=ēk, one. Before consonants we find ba; thus, bagōllē, gram; balūā, rupee. In barlāṭhī, stick, we have a double prefix bar. In other cases b replaces an initial consonant; thus, bōrā=chhōrā, boy; bāḍī=chāḍī, silver; bēndrā=jandrā, lock; bīwar=jhiūr, water-carrier; bēṇḍhā=saṇḍhā, male buffalo; banh=sanh, house-breaking; baunā=sōnā, gold; bunyārā=sunyārā, goldsmith; bindū, Hindu, etc.

r and rh, finally, are often substituted for k, kh, respectively; thus, rāṭhī=kāṭhī, saddle; rēṭnā=kāṭnā, cut; rāl=kāl, famine; ruñjī=kuñjī, key; rudāh or rhadhāi=khudā, God; rhaphā=khafā, angry; rhījmat=khidmat, service; rhēt=khēt, field; rhāt=khāt, bed, and so forth.

It will be seen from the examples quoted that one and the same word often occurs in many variously disguised forms. Thus we find khapair, chhapair, nair and pair, foot; chhabāptā, ḍhabāptā and bāptā, father; bagōllē, nhōllē and chhōllē, gram, and so on. There is not, so far as we can see, any principle according to which one or the other form is chosen. The use of different letters in order to make a word unrecognizable is, so far as can be ascertained, absolutely arbitrary, and it is impossible to detect any rules regulating the choice between them.

Another way of disguising words is by adding consonants after them. Such additions are:—

k in chulkṇā, to speak; cf. chōlī=bōlī, speech. A kh has apparently been inserted in the middle of a word in mikhltā=miltā, is being met with.

g is common after r in several pronominal forms; thus, mērgā, my; tērgā, thy; kēhrgā, which. It is further added after verbs such as kauhṇā=kahnā, tell; rauhṇā=rahnā, remain; gaugṇā, to go; gaugā, went, cf. gayā, went. It also occurs in several stray instances such as kadgī, ever; kōggī, kōī, anyone; chaug=chār, four; duhāṅgī=duhāī, appeal; hukamgā-kō, the command, and so forth.

ṭh is added in naṭṭhā=nāṭṭhā, name; dūrṭhā=dūr, far; naṭṭhī=nāṭṭhī, barber.

t occurs in forms such as bāptā, father; bhautā, brother; mautī, mother; and a double addition dhrē is used in jaṭṭdhrē=jaṭṭ, barley.

p is added after vocalic bases; thus, dēpnā, to give; lēpnā, to take; hōpnā, to become. Similarly nāhpī, not. The use of an added b is more doubtful. I have noted lēgbā=lagā, began; and in chhūbyā=chhagrā, goat, b seems to have superseded g in the middle of a word.

r is added in words such as dhōr, two; thēr, three. In jasrna, go; asrna, come, sr has been added after the base.

More sporadic interchange of consonants can be observed in forms such as kumbhlā=kumhār, potter; cf. neōklā=chhōkrā, boy; gaunā=gādhā, ass, etc.

Abbreviated forms also occur; such are kōndh, the dark half of a month; khōṇā=khōlnā, to open; pāgg=pagrī, turban.

The preceding examples will have shown that also the vowels are occasionally changed. Thus, a and ā become u, o and ō, respectively, when a k is prefixed; compare kuggē, before; kōdmī, man. When a g is added a and ā often become au; thus, kauhṇā, to tell; gaugā, went; chaug, four. Compare also bhautā, brother; mautī, mother. In other instances an a-sound is changed to ē; thus, chēnguā=chāngā, good; bēṇḍhā=saṇḍhā, male buffalo; lēgbā=lagā, began; rēkhwaṇā=rakhṇā, place; rēṭṇā=kāṭṇā, cut. I and u are sometimes interchanged; thus, bīṇḍī=bundā, eardrop; gupāhī=sipāhī, soldier; kharājū=rājī, pleased. An ē or ai may be changed to u or au; thus, khuntā=gaintā, pickaxe; naukhṇā=dēkhṇā, see; ō is occasionally replaced by au or eō; thus, baunā=sōnā, gold; neōklā=chhōkrā, boy. Other instances of interchange are baleā=billā, eat; leōkrī=lakrī, wood; gāddar=gīdar, jackal, and so forth. All such changes are apparently quite arbitrary. Note also double changes in words such as khadēpaṅgrā=dēṅgrā, will give; khanīṭṭh=piṭṭh, back; chulkṇā=bōlnā, to speak; chhangāh=gunāh, sin; ḍhamkīr=Kashmir; ḍhumalmān=Musalmān; thūb=ūṭh, camel, and so forth.

None of these changes affects the grammar of the dialect. The inflexional forms remain the same. The individual words alone are changed. Thus many of the pronouns appear in a new shape; compare khamāi and maĩ, by me; khamērā, khamērgā, mērgā and mērā, my, and so on. The present tense of the verb substantive is hōpē, hōpē, hōpē, and so forth, or hōpē throughout; "I went" is gauhgā or jasriā and so forth.

It follows from what has already been said that the Criminal Sāsī is not a separate dialect, and that the individual words have no fixed forms. Ordinary words are of course used to a great extent, and the degree in which they are disguised, and the manner of disguising, differ. The specimens which follow will give a good idea of this argot. The first two have been placed at my disposal by Dr. Grahame Bailey, the chief authority on Sāsī. The third has been received from Gurdaspur. The Standard List of Words and Sentences in ordinary and criminal Sāsī, for which I am likewise indebted to the kindness of Dr. Bailey, will be found on pp. 178ff.

KÖLHĀṬĪ.

The Kōlhāṭīs are a tribe of rope dancers and tumblers in Bombay, Berar and the Hyderabad State. They are said¹ to take their name from Name. kōlhāṭ, the bamboo on which they perform. The corresponding Kanarese form of the name, however, is kollaṭiga, which is a compound of kol-kōl, a stick, a rod, and aṭiga, a player. In the Bombay Presidency they are also called Dōmbārī or Dōmbhārī, which word must have something to do with Dōm, the name of another Gipsy tribe. According to Mr. Balfour they call themselves Bhatū; compare bhattū, the name used by Sāsīs to indicate a man of their tribe.

In the Bombay Presidency the Kōlhāṭīs are also makers of the small buffalo horn pulleys which are used with cart ropes in fastening loads. Occupation. They also make hide combs and gunpowder flasks. When a girl comes of age, she is called to choose between marriage and prostitution. If, with her parents' consent, she wishes to lead a married life, she is well taken care of and carefully watched. If she chooses to be a tumbler and a prostitute, she is taken before the caste council, a feast is given, and with the consent of the council she is declared a prostitute. The prostitutes are not allowed to eat with other Kōlhāṭīs, except with their own children. Still, when they grow old, their caste-fellows support them.² According to Major Gunthorpe,³ the Kōlhāṭīs of the Dekhan 'belong to the great Sānsya family of robbers and claim their descent from Mallanūr, the brother of Sānsmal. There are two tribes, Dukar Kōlhāṭīs and Kam or Pāl Kōlhāṭīs. The former are a non-wandering criminal tribe, whereas the latter are a non-wandering criminal class. Depraved in morals, the males of both tribes subsist to a great extent on the prostitution of some of their females, though let it be said to the credit of the former that they are not so bad as the latter. They labour for themselves by cultivating land, by taking service as village watchmen, or by hiring themselves to villages to destroy that pest of Indian farmers, the wild dog, and above all they are professional robbers. Kam Kōlhāṭīs, on the other hand, are a lazy, good-for-nothing class of men who, beyond making a few combs and shuttles of bone, will set their hands to no class of labour, but subsist mainly by the immoral pursuits of their women.'

At the last Census of 1911 Kōlhāṭīs were returned only from the Hyderabad State where they were said to be 1,143 in number. The returns of the Census of 1901 were much fuller, and were as follows:—

Specimens of a dialect called Kōlhāṭī have been forwarded from Berar and also from the Chanda District of the Central Provinces. They all agree in so many particulars that we are justified in talking of a Kōlhāṭī dialect, and there is no reason for supposing that the Kōlhāṭīs of the Bombay Presidency use a different form of speech. During the preliminary operations of this Survey a dialect called Kōlhāṭī was returned from the following districts :—

Authority.

A Kōlhāṭī vocabulary has been published in the following work :—

BALFOUR, EDWARD,—On the Migratory Tribes of Natives in Central India. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. xiii, Part i, 1844, pp. 1 and ff. Note on the "Bhatoos" on p. 12; vocabulary, pp. 17 and f.

Mr. Balfour states that the names of the tribe are Bhatoo, Doomur or Kollati.

Dialect.

Bhatoo is identical with the Sāsī word bhattū, a Sāsī man.

The corresponding Kōlhātī feminine bhatānī means 'wife' and is identical with Sāsi bhatānī, a Sāsi woman. It is tempting to infer a closer relationship between Kōlhātī and Sāsi from this, and indeed, an examination of Kōlhātī shows that it is a dialect of the same kind as Sāsi and connected forms of speech. With regard to phonology we may here note the frequency with which consonants are doubled, while the preceding vowel often is long or half long; thus, ēkka, one; rakkh, keep; khōggā, house; ruṭṭī, bread; uṭṭhī, having arisen; gāḍḍhī, having taken out; sātta, seven; baddhē, were bound; rānna, ear; khumma, mouth; bhallā, much. Other phonetical features are of less significance. Such are the occasional change of ch to s in the Ellichpur specimens; compare kharsī, spent; the change of ḷ to y in Akola, a common occurrence in the current Marāṭhī of the district; compare rāy=kāl, famine; muyē and mudē, on account of. The interchange of hard and soft sounds in words such as ap-sī, from now; gāḍḍhī, having taken out, but kaḍḍ, draw, in the Akola specimens may also prove of interest.

The inflexional system is mainly the same as in Pañjābī-Sāṣī. We may note the frequent ā-termination of the oblique form of masculine bases ending in ī or a consonant, and of feminines, an important point of agreement with Sāṣī; compare khētā-mē, in the field; ārōpīyā-thō, near the accused; bhatānīyā-nē, by the wife. In Akola we find the Gujarātī termination ō in forms such as bāpō, fathers; khōggō-mē-sī, from in the house; kachēriō-mē, in court.

The case terminations are broadly the same as in Hindōstānī, viz.:—case of the agent -nē; dative -ku, -kō; ablative -sē, -sī; genitive -kā, kī, kē, kiā; locative -mē.

With regard to pronouns we may note hũ, I; ham, we, in Akola. In Buldana, Ellichpur and Chanda, we find mē, mī, I; compare Marāṭhī. In Ellichpur we also find the form mērē-ku, to me, which was also used in the Bēldārī of the same neighbourhood. Note also forms such as jabō, then, in Akola, which remind us of Rājasthānī.

The conjugation of verbs is mainly the same as in Pañjābī and Sāṣī. In the Akola specimens forms such as kahēṅgḍā, said, are translated as past tenses. In the list of words, however, we find hōṅgḍā, I shall be ; compare the Sāṣī future suffix grā. The future of mārṇā, to beat, is stated to be māraṅ throughout all persons and numbers in Akola. In Ellichpur we find future forms such as jānēgā, I shall go ; ballēgā, I shall say.

The general character of Kōlhātī will be seen from the beginning of a version of the Parable which follows. It has been forwarded from Ellichpur.

The few Kōlhāṭīs of Chanda use a similar form of speech. The usual past tense of verbs, however, more closely agrees with Hindōstānī; compare bōlā, said; lagā, began. Other details will be ascertained from the version of a well-known tale which follows.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A man had two small children, a son and a daughter. The boy was very good looking, the girl was of indifferent beauty. One day the two children were playing near the looking-glass. The boy said to the girl, 'come, let us look in the glass to see who is the prettiest.' This did not please the girl. She thought that he did it in order to humiliate her. Then she went to her father and complained of the boy. She said, 'to derive pleasure from looking at one's face in a glass is the business of women; a man should not put his mind on such things.' The father clasped both to his bosom, satisfied her and said, 'children, don't quarrel. I should like both of you to look into the glass every day.'

The word kōynē-mē, in the glass, in the Chanda specimen, where a k has been added in front of the word ainē-mē, reminds us of various methods of disguising words in Criminal Sāsī and similar argots.

The specimens received from Akola show that the Kōlhāṭis know the use of an artificial language of the same kind. There are in the first place some peculiar words such as kājjī, woman; khōggā, house; khūm, mouth, face; chēnī, water; ṭummī, head; ṭaunā, fall; ṭhāy, beat; ṭiwā, rupee; ṭhōknā, sit; ḍutta, eat; dhēḍ, a Mahār (lit. a huge, burly, person); bhatānī, wife; hēṭṭī, women, and so on. Common words are moreover disguised in various ways, as in other argots.

A consonant is often prefixed or substituted for the initial. Gutturals are used in this way in words such as kajēṭā=bēṭā, child; kōkkha=ākḥ, eye; kōdmī=ādmī, man; kōhōt=hāth, hand; khūt=ūṭh, camel; khanākka=nāk, nose; khanajik=najik, near; khūmbar=umar, age; khōran=haran, deer, and so forth. It should be noted that after k, kh, an a-sound is often replaced by an o-sound, just as is the case in Sāsī.

As in Sāsī and similar argots a palatal is often used as a substitute for a labial. Thus, chaḍā=baḍā, big; chhut=bhūt, devil; (ka)jēṭā=bēṭā, boy; jōhōt=bahut, much.

ṭh and ḍh are prefixed in words such as ṭhamāl, property; ṭhamarnā, to die; dhōkkal, a dog.

Of dentals we find th in thēr, three, and dh in dhōr, two. Moreover n is a common substitute; thus, nān=chāḍ, moon; nyār=chār, four; nōr=chōr, thief; nāt=jāt, caste; nīb=jībḥ, tongue; nāṭṭa=dāṭ, tooth; nusrā=ḍusrā, other; nēṭ=pēṭ, belly; nāch=pāch, five; nōkkaḍ=bōkaḍ, goat; nihē=liyē, for the sake of. This n is sometimes aspirated, when it has been substituted for an aspirate or s; thus, nhēt=khēt, field; nhāḍ=ḍghāḍ, tree; nhāmē=sāmnē, before; nhuriyā=suriyā, sun.

B is prefixed in words such as bēk, one; bus, him; bēṭhē-sī, from here. It replaces an old initial in words such as bōrā=chhōrā, boy; bannagar=ḍhangar, shepherd; bōnmā=sōnā, gold.

R is apparently only used instead of an initial guttural; thus, ris-kā, whose? rēṭṭī, how much? rānna=kān, ear; rāy=gāy, cow; rāw=gāw, village; rhup=khūb, well; rhōḍā=ghōḍā, horse; rhālō=ghālō, put.

Sometimes also words are disguised by means of additions at the end. Thus gh has been added in gōghā, went; rōghyā, stayed; a palatal has been suffixed in bānchī, sister; nanchhā, small; nāwchhā, name; hōchchē, is, etc. Other additions are tā in bāptā, father; bhāṭtā, brother; p in ḍēppa, give; lyēp, take; r in dhōr, two; w in āwotā, comes; s and sar in jāssa, go; āsartā, comes, and so forth.

Further details will be ascertained by studying the specimens which follow. The first is the beginning of a version of the Parable; the second is the deposition of a witness. The Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 179ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I, Jānu, son of Hari, a Kōlhāṭī by caste, aged thirty, a resident of Kandi, state on oath that, about a fortnight ago, on a Friday night, I and my wife and two children were sleeping in the house. At midnight my wife roused me and said, 'there is a rattling of pots in the house, and footsteps are heard, therefore get up.' Then I got up and on looking towards the wall I saw a hole in it. I then understood that somebody must have broken into the house. There was no light in the house, but there was a match-box beneath my bed. I immediately got hold of it and lighted a match. Then this very accused began to move towards the hole made in the wall. As soon as I saw him, I caught hold of him and holding him by the hand said to him, 'Ah thief, where are you off for?' Then there was a great struggle between him and me, and I cried out loudly from within the house. Thereupon my neighbours Sitārām and Iṭhōbā came. In the meantime my wife lighted a lamp and unchained the door from within, and the persons just noted stepped into the house. Then I felt much strength. When the accused was searched five pieces of bodice-cloth were found on him. They are worth three rupees. They are mine and were in the bundle of my wife, which was near the jar-pile by the grinding stone. Nothing besides this is lost. We three bound the hands of the accused and immediately took him to the Paṭēl and informed him of what had happened. The Paṭēl gave the accused in charge of a chaukidār and a mahār and in the morning sent him to the police station at Barsi Takli. I do not know from what village the accused is or what his name is, for he does not belong to our village. I struck a match to light the lamp, and then I saw the accused at the hole. Therefore I could not light the lamp. A man can with difficulty go in and out of the hole made in the wall. The iron spike before the Court, with which the wall was bored, was found by me in the bath-room near the hole.

GĀRŌḌĪ.

The Gārōḍīs are a wandering tribe of jugglers in the Belgaum District. Their head-quarters are said to be at Miraj near Kolhapur. They are said to have been converted to Muhammadanism about the middle of the sixteenth century, and are looked upon as belonging to the Madārī sect. According to the Bombay Gazetteer,¹ 'the men are middle-sized, sturdy, and dark or olive . . . The women, who like the men are middle-sized, are thin, well-featured, and dark or olive . . . The men are jugglers, tumblers, and snake-charmers. They are hard-working, but are much given to intoxicating drinks and drugs and are poorly clad and scrimped for food . . . Except circumcising their boys they keep no Musalman customs, and are Muhammadans in little more than name.'

The name Gārōḍī or Gārūḍī is derived from gāruḍa, a snake-charmer. I have no information as to the number of Gārōḍīs in Belgaum.

Two specimens and a list of Standard Words and Sentences have been received from Belgaum as illustrating the dialect of the Gārōḍīs. It is a rather inconsistent form of speech, and it seems probable that several of the forms registered in the list are incorrect. Thus the future lugācuṅgō, shall beat, is stated to be used in both numbers. In the specimens, however, we find hapcluṅgā, let us become. This latter form most closely agrees with Eastern Rājasthānī. On the whole it will be seen that Gārōḍī is based on a mixture of Hindōstānī, Rājasthānī and Marāṭhī. Thus the nominative of strong masculine bases ends in ō in the singular as in Rājasthānī and Gujarātī, though we also find rēmṇā, goat, as in Hindōstānī. The plural and the oblique base end in ē as in Hindōstānī; compare lāwḍē (but also lāwḍō), sons; bhāwutē-kū, to a father. The genitive ends in kō as in Rājasthānī. Before an inflected masculine noun we also find kī. In the periphrastic present we find lugū hū, I am dying, as in Mēwātī, Mālvī, and Mēwārī. The past tense of the verb substantive is chhō as in Jaipurī; Marāṭhī forms are mī, I; lāwḍē, a child; the common emphatic ch, and so on. In addition to all these elements there is also an admixture of Dravidian. It is seen in some words such as iṅgā, here; uṅgā, there; nīrmā, water; nānd, house, village, etc., in the frequent use of adverbial and relative participles such as hāyilētō, when coming; hāyilandē, coming; bētēsō, eaten, and so forth.

It would, however, be useless to go into further details. The mixed nature of the dialect will be sufficiently apparent from the specimens.

Like other Gipsy tribes the Gārōḍīs try to make their speech unintelligible by using strange words or else by disguising ordinary words in various ways. Some of the unusual words found in the specimens are alḍī, whip; bēt, eat; bōngā, gold; chisam, good; chōnō, name; ḍhamuklō, belly; ḍhikmō, slave; ḍharālī, iron; ḍhāytī, property; ḍzhalwītṇī, harlot; ḍzhāmī, midnight; ḍzhangī, a bulbous root; gōnō, hand; gōnālī, foot; ghuruknā, swine; jachan, diagnose; kājā, man; kanēchī, eye (cf. Tamil kaṇa); khōmḍā, mouth; kīcsō, bull; kāylī, ailment; lug, die; lugā, beat; mallā, garden; nīmal, run, loose; nānd, house, village; nāthyā, wife; nīrmā, water; panēchī, back (cf.

Kanarese bennu); tabēt, health; ṭap, fall; ṭōk, say; ṭōlchō, head (cf. Kanarese tale); ṭhig, sit; walā, give, and so on.

† Ordinary words are sometimes disguised by means of a simple transposition of the letters; thus, ḍabō, big; and perhaps ṭap, fall. Occasionally we find aspiration or disaspiration of consonants; thus, ghāyilē, they went; lhailkanā, having taken; nākyō, threw.

In many cases a consonant has been prefixed or substituted for the initial of a word. Kh is used in this way in words such as khadmī, man; khūpar, above; khut-kō, having arisen; khōyīd=baid, doctor. In gāndilō, silver, g is similarly used instead of ch, and in rēmnā, goat, r for m.

Ch is, as in many similar argots, used instead of b in words such as chulāwu, to call; chōḷnī, word, state. Note chirwānd, bind. In jīlātī, cat, j has been used in a similar way, cf. bilādī. Dzh is a more common substitute; compare dzhichādī, behind; dzhukāyit=bhūkh, hunger; dzhāil-kanā, having gone; dzhapplī, shoe, sandal; dzhupār, afternoon (cf. dō pahār), and so on. A t has been substituted for a p in ṭikaḍ, seize. The initial ḍh in ḍhamuklō, belly; ḍhikmō, slave, is probably of the same kind. The syllable tur in turcālē, hair, is apparently also an addition made in order to disguise the word, or else it may be a disguised sir, head. Other consonants used in a similar way are n in nētyā-kū, to the fields; l in lipadā, cloths; and, cockney way, h in hāyil, come; hunṭ, camel.

Another way of disguising words is by means of additions at the end. Such additions are,— k in bhēkdā, brother; and g in bōngā, gold; compare, however, Kanarese baṅgāra;

ch in kanēchī, eye; kānēchī, ear; chandichī, moon; bhanichī, sister; nhanchō, small, etc.;

ṭ in ghōrtō, horse; ḍ in khagādī, before; khōmḍā, mouth; dāḍwā, tooth; bhēkdā, brother, etc.;

t in dzhukāyit, hunger;

p in rhapēlyō, was; hapē-nā, am not;

m in ek-mū, one; dul-mū, two; kitmū, how many? bhutmū, devil; dēmā, god; tōḍmē, I broke; thudmē, few; karmel, do; sunmel-kā, having heard, etc.

l in karēlyō, did; karmel, do; ghalel, put; ghāyilē, went; chalēlē, went; jagāyilyo, waked; dzhāyil, go; baṭal-kā, dividing; rakellē, keep; sunel-hāyilyō, hearing came, was heard; sunnel-kā, having heard; hāyilyō, came; dulmū, two, and so forth. Similarly we find ḷ in words such as nachlan, dancing; mōklō, relief.

Finally we find s added in kharsā, ass.

By means of all these additions the argot of the Gārōḍīs gets a peculiar appearance. Further details will be ascertained from the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, the second is an incomplete version of a well-known tale. The Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 179ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A simple remedy for indigestion.

There lived in a town a rich man who always ate much and was given to sedentary habits. He took no kind of exercise, and therefore he now and then suffered from indisposition. One day he went to dine with a friend. He ate a lot and stayed up till midnight. Consequently he had a bad fit of indigestion the next morning. Therefore he drove over to the doctor's to have his disease diagnosed. The doctor felt his pulse, diagnosed his disease and said, 'in a garden about two kōs from here there is a bulbous root which is a specific for your disease. If you please, follow me there, and I shall have it dug out. Then your ailment will cease in the afternoon and you will get relief.' Hearing this the man said, 'my carriage is ready, come, let us go there.' After having said so he drove along in company with the doctor. When they had gone on about two kōs from the town, the doctor intentionally dropped the whip.

MYĀNWĀLE OR LHĀRĪ.

The word Myānwālā means a scabbard-maker. No information is available about the people who bear the name. Specimens of their dialect have been forwarded from the Belgaum District. The names given to this form of speech is Myānwālē or Lhārī. Myānwālē is simply the plural form of Myānwālā. Lhārī probably represents a rapid pronunciation of Lōhārī, the language of the Lōhārs. At the last Census of 1911, 817 Lōhārs were enumerated in Belgaum. It is not, however, probable that the so-called Myānwālē is the language of all the Lōhārs; it is probably only spoken by a small section.

The base of Myānwālē is Dakhanī Hindōstānī and Rājasthānī-Gujarātī. Thus, strong masculine bases end in ō in the singular as in the latter, and in ē in the plural as in the former. The distinction between singular and plural forms is, to judge from the conjugation, of little importance; compare lōtūngō, he will beat, they will beat. Forms such as hitwādyā, they went, show that the termination ē is not the only one in the plural of strong bases; the Rājasthānī-Gujarātī termination ā must be used as well. Of case terminations we may note dative kū as in Mālvī and Dakhanī Hindōstānī, genitive kō as in Mālvī or kā as in Hindōstānī; and locative mē as in Mālvī and Hindōstānī, or mā, cf. Gujarātī mā. There does not appear to exist a separate case of the agent, the nominative being used to denote the subject even if the verb is the past tense of a transitive.

"I" is mē as in Bundēli, and "we" is hamē, cf. Gujarātī amē.

The conjugation of verbs does not appear to be correctly represented in the list of words, where we find forms such as hū for all persons and numbers of the present tense of the verb substantive and lōtū for the corresponding forms of lōt-nā, to beat. Forms such as lug-nalō, dying go, I die; rhōkē, thou art; hōbrē, is, show that the present tense is formed like the old present in Mālvī. The past tense ends in ō or yō; thus, chōhwādyō, said; lōtō, struck. The future is formed as in Hindōstānī but with the singular ending in gō as in Eastern Rājasthānī; thus, rhāuṅgō, I shall be; hōbraṅgē, we shall become. In the list of words forms such as lōtūngō, I shall beat, are used in all persons and numbers.

Other forms mainly agree with Hindōstānī and Rājasthānī-Gujarātī. Note the relative participle in sō, as in dutōsō, eaten; hōbrēsō, being; the use of karke, karkō, having done, corresponding to the Sanskrit iti; and the negative jīn in chulāvē jīn, do not call; for the last, compare Kanaujī and Eastern Hindī.

Myānwālē is, to judge from the specimens, an artificial argot built up on this base. There are some peculiar words such as barawād, come; bēt, take; chhēgē, preparation; chhuman, see; chigīt, run; chāyī, water; chundaḍī, ring; damōlō, man; dāmī, woman; dut, eat; gēlō, gelpō, boy; jukēlā, dog; kīchī, fire; khīch, give; khōk, house; lugānā, to break; lugīt, die; lōt, strike; nānd, village; nīrō, good; nōkaḍō, name; rhākḷō, brother. Some of these such as the base bara, to come; nānd, village (Kanarese nādu), seem to be Dravidian. Others are comparable with similar words in other argots.

Ordinary Aryan words are, moreover, disguised in various ways so as to make them unintelligible to outsiders. Sometimes a vowel is changed or an aspirated consonant disaspirated; compare pēsō=pās, near; nuchō=pūchhā, asked; ripchē=pīchhē, behind. More commonly an initial consonant is changed or a consonant prefixed.

K is substituted in hurṇā, swine; compare sūār.

Kh has been prefixed in words such as khādmī, man; khagāḍī, before; khāpṇō, own; khutnē-mē, in the meantime; khēk, one; khidēw, god; khiraṇḍ, harlot. In khulke, having said, it has replaced an old b, and so on.

A g has been substituted for other initials in gipaḍā=kapṛā, clothes; and perhaps in gēlō, boy, cf. bēḷā.

As in similar argots ch and chh are often substituted for labials. Compare chaḍḍō=barā, big; chōnd=bāndh, tying; chhīl=bhar, filling; chhuk=bhūkh, hunger; chhurgā=murgā, cock.

Dh is prefixed as in similar argots; compare ḍhākō=kākā, uncle; ḍhimlē=mīlā, was got; ḍhuṇabī=kuṇbī, a cultivator; ḍhēḷyā, compare bhēṛā, a kid.

N is a very common substitute. It replaces a guttural in nusāl, merry; narībī, poverty; nusā, angry; a palatal in nākar, servant; nūk, sin; a dental in nōs, friend; a labial in naḍ-ke, falling; nāp, sin; nir-ku, again; nirāw, put on; nirādē (firyāḍī), complainant; narābar, immediately; nāt, state; naras, year; nītar, inside; nan, mind; an h in nakhikat, facts. It has been substituted for an s in nabaḷo, all; compare sab and sagla. Instead of s, however, we more commonly find nh; thus, nhankaḷ, difficulty; nhun-ke, hearing; nhuriyā, sun. Nh is also used as a substitute for aspirated consonants in nhēt, field; nhūs, chaff; nhōknō, small.

B has been substituted for l in bēlō, took; and for s in buṇakke, to be heard (note the Dravidian termination). A b has been replaced by an m in māwutō, father, probably under the influence of māwutī, mother.

Ṛ is also a common substitute, especially for labials; thus, rikan, ear; rātō, share; rāl, hair; riṇchē=pīchhē, behind; rhāklō=bhāī, brother; rhār, outside. Rhāklō, brother, is, however, perhaps connected with the European Gipsy word rāklō, boy.

Another device of disguising words is by means of various additions at the end, which then often replace an old final.

Thus a k is added in rhōkē, art; niskō, head; and a kn in nhōknō=chhōṭā, small. If rhāklō, brother, is derived from bhāī, a kḷ has been added.

An additional g occurs in words such as chōg, four; dūg, far; dōg, two, and so on. A ch is used in a similar way in words such as kīchō, did; ghōḍchō, horse.

An addition ṛ is used in some intransitive verbs; thus, chīgīṛ, run; nukīṛō, lost; barīṛō, came; lugīṛō, dead. A ḍ is added in khagāḍī, before. I may here add the suffixes ōḍ and wāḍ in verbal forms such as natōḍ, dividing; rakhōḍ, keeping; ghalōḍ, put; barawāḍī, she came; rhōkwāḍō, stayed; hiṭwāḍyā, they passed.

A l has been added in words such as bēt, take; māwutō, father, etc. The p in gēlpō=gēlō, boy, must be a similar addition.

An l or ḷ is apparently added or substituted for another final in words such as gēlō=bēḷā (?), boy; ḍhēḷyā, kid; compare bhēṛā, ram: chhīl=bhar (?), filling; kōḷ=kar, doing (compare Sāsi kāḷ); gawalnō, singing, and so on.

The bar in hōbar-ke, having been, and so on, is probably a similar addition.

Further details will be ascertained from the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, the second a popular tale. The Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 179ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain village there lived two beggars who were intimate friends. One day they thought of going together to a foreign country. They entrusted whatever little money they possessed to an honest old woman, requesting her to return it if they both came jointly to ask for it, and went away. A few days after one of them came back to the old woman and said, 'mother, my friend died on the road; therefore give my money to me.' She made many excuses, but he would not listen, and at last she returned the money to him.

Some days afterwards the other one came to the old woman and asked for the deposit. Then the old woman said, 'brother, a few days back thy friend came, said that you had died, and asked for the money. I remonstrated with him that you two would have to come together, but he did not heed my word and forcibly took the money from me.'

He then lodged a complaint before a judge. The judge summoned the old woman and ascertained all the facts.

KANJARĪ.

The name Kanjar is used to denote an aggregate of vagrant tribes. Mr. W. Crooke, in his Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, states that they are probably of Dravidian origin. He further remarks that 'there can be little doubt that the Kanjars are a branch of the great nomadic race which includes the Sānsiya, Hābūra, Beriya Bhātu, and more distant kindred, such as the Nat, Banjāra, Baheliya.'

Many of them live in the forests, 'where they subsist by hunting wolves, hares, and any kind of animal they can kill or catch, by gathering such roots and vegetable products as require no cultivation, and by extracting juice from the palm tree, which, after it has become fermented, is the favourite beverage of almost all the wandering and low-caste tribes of India. They are clever at trapping birds and squirrels, and any other kind of vermin which chance may throw in their way, all of which they eat indiscriminately. The arts of the Kanjars are making mats of the sirkī reed, baskets of wattled cane, fans of palm leaves, and rattles of plaited straw. From the stalks of the mūnj grass and from the roots of the palāśa tree they make ropes, which are sold or bartered to villagers in exchange for grain, milk, pigs, etc. They prepare the skins out of which drums are made, and sell them to Hindu musicians. They make plates of broad leaves which are ingeniously stitched together by the stalks; and plates of this kind are very widely used by the inferior Indian castes and by confectioners and sellers of sweetmeats. They are among the chief stone-cutters of Upper India, especially in the manufacture of the grinding-stone, which is largely used. They gather the white wool-like fibre which grows in the pods of the śalmali or Indian cotton tree, and twist it into thread for the use of weavers. In the manufacture of brushes for the cleaning of cotton yarn, they enjoy an almost entire monopoly, and another complete or almost complete monopoly enjoyed by Kanjars is the collection and sale of the roots of khaskhas grass, which are afterwards made up by others into door screens and used as refrigerators during the hottest months of the year. At the same time many Kanjars are now taking to a more settled life: some are cultivators and field labourers; others live in towns and make door screens, baskets, sieves, and the like, and some of them in this way have considerably raised their social status.'

No satisfactory explanation of the word Kanjar has as yet been given. It has been derived from Sanskrit kānanachara, wanderer in the jungle, but this etymology is hardly possible from a philological point of view. It is more likely that kanjar is a shorter form of the word kājarō or kājārō, man, which is used by many Kanjars, and which is related to Sāsi kājā, Naṭi kājā and Dōm kājā. We do not know whether this word is Aryan or not. It is probably identical with Romani gājō.

The Kanjars are most numerous in the United Provinces in which, according to the Census of 1911, they numbered 18,345. Elsewhere there were 5,638, giving a total of 23,983.

BIBLIOGRAPHY—

KIRKPATRICK, W.,—A Vocabulary of the Pasi Bolī or Argot of the Kunchbandiya Kanjars. Journal and Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. vii, 1911, pp. 277ff. Contains a bibliography of papers dealing with the Kanjars and connected tribes.

KIRKPATRICK, W.,—Folk-songs and Folk-lore of the Gehara (Kanjars). ibidem, pp. 437ff. Other papers by the same author are found ibidem, pp. 669ff. (Exogamous Septs of the Gehara Section of Kuchbandia Kanjars), and pp. 753ff. (Oaths and Ordeals of the Geharas (Kanjars) of the Delhi District). They do not deal with the language.

We are very insufficiently informed about the language of the Kanjars, and it is possible that in most districts they use the dialect of their surroundings. During the preliminary operations of this Survey a dialect Kanjarī was returned from the following districts:—

United Provinces	6,735
Aligarh	800
Farrukhabad	435
Sitapur	3,000
Kheri	2,500
Central India	350
Gwalior	350
TOTAL											.	7,085

These figures are only loose estimates. Thus the number of Kanjars in Sitapur, where the estimated number of speakers was 3,000, was only 814 at the Census of 1901. On the other hand specimens of Kanjarī have been forwarded from Etawah and Belgaum, where no such dialect was reported to exist. The state of affairs is similar to that which we find in the case of other vagrant tribes. The Kanjars largely adopt the dialect of their neighbours. If they want to avoid being understood, however, they, or at least some of them, avail themselves of an artificial argot, in which there is a certain number of peculiar words and where, in addition to these, ordinary words are used, but often in an altered shape, so as to become unintelligible to outsiders. So far as we can judge from the specimens, however, Kanjarī differs from other Gipsy argots such as Naṭī in having a more uniform base. The prevailing language in Aligarh, Farrukhabad and Etawah is Western Hindī and in Sitapur and Kheri Eastern Hindī, while Kanarese and Marāṭhī predominate in Belgaum. The specimens received from all these districts, however, agree in so many particulars that we are almost justified in talking of a separate dialect. This dialect is, however, not a clearly defined form of speech, but a mixture of various languages, just as we should expect in the case of a vagrant tribe. But the mixture seems to be old and to have acquired a certain degree of constancy. The specimen received from Kheri, it is true, is written in Western Hindī, and only forms such as dilā-mē, in the heart; basindā, an inhabitant, show that the Kanjars from whose lips the specimen was taken down were not quite imbued with the grammar of that language. It seems likely that the Kheri specimen represents an attempt at talking Hindōstānī and not Kanjarī, and we can safely leave it out of consideration when trying to define the position of the latter. Also the Farrukhabad specimen is strongly influenced by Hindōstānī.

The inflexion of nouns in many respects differs from Hindōstānī. The oblique base of weak nouns sometimes ends in ā; thus, garā-sē, to the neck (Aligarh); garā-mā, on the neck (Etawah). Similarly the oblique plural ends in ā or ā̃; thus, naukar-chakrā-sē, to the servants (Aligarh); rarsā-sē, years from (Sitapur); naukrā-ku, to the servants (Belgaum). Such forms agree with Marāṭhī, the singular ones also with Bihārī and the plural ones with Rājasthānī.

An ō is often added to weak bases and kept in the oblique form; thus, ribō-kē, of the house (Aligarh, Sitapur); bihārō-mē, in the property (Etawah); dāmō-dē, of value (Farrukhabad); bāpō-nē, by the father (Belgaum). This ō is different from the final ō of strong masculine bases, which becomes ā in the oblique form and in the plural; thus, chūbkō, son; chūbkā, sons; baphēlā-sē, to the father, in the Sitapur specimens and similar forms in the materials forwarded from the other districts. Ordinary Hindōstānī forms are used as well. The Rājasthānī affinities acquire some significance if we remember that we find a similar state of affairs in other argots such as Ḍōm, Naṭī and Sāsī.

The case suffixes are mainly Hindōstānī. The dative suffix ku, kū, kō also reminds us of Dravidian. The ablative suffix is commonly sē, in Farrukhabad, however, also sū̃ as in Mārwarī, Jaipurī and Mālvī. In Belgaum we find dē, from, which perhaps has something to do with the genitive suffix dā, dī, which is used in addition to kā, kī, in Farrukhabad. It will be seen that this latter suffix is identical with the Pañjābī one. It is, however, possible that it has something to do with Tamil uḍēiya, Kanarese da.¹

In many of the specimens we will find that the final ō of adjectives is often kept before an inflected noun; thus, khachchhō najaū-kū̃, to a good man (Sitapur); ōchhō baṭrā-nē, by the younger son (Etawah); apaō kauṛī paisā, his money (Farrukhabad); tēro naukrī, thy service (Belgaum). Such instances point to the conclusion that the sense of gender is weak and that adjectives are not inflected, a state of affairs which would be natural if the Kanjars were not originally Aryans.

With regard to pronouns we may note the use of the base jō, jī, as a demonstrative pronoun, just as is the case in Rājasthānī, and, further, the curious forms urō-nē, by him (Aligarh); urō-kā, his (Etawah); īgal, this matter; kēgal, what matter (Farrukhabad); ūr, birō, he; urō-kō, his (Sitapur); yō, thou; yurō-ku, urō-ku, to thee; urō-ku, to him. These and similar forms remind us of Dravidian; compare Tulu īr, Kui and Old Telugu īru, you; Tamil Kanarese avar Gōṇḍī ōr, he, etc.

The conjugation of verbs presents some peculiar features. There are several additions to the base which do not appear to modify the meaning. Thus an r is frequently suffixed; compare hubbār rai-r-ī, is going on (Aligarh); lugai-r-ō, he beats (Sitapur); rah-r-ō, he remained (Aligarh); ā-r-ō, he came; sun-r-ō, he heard (Etawah); ā-r-ō, he came; lugai-r-ō̃, I had beaten (Sitapur); kuṭ-r-ō, I struck; gaug-r-ō, I went; dusā-r-ō, I said; hu-r-ō, I became (Belgaum). This r is sometimes followed by the termination s of the past; thus, kai-r-s, did; said; khā-r-s, ate; pī-r-s, drank; karī-gu-r-sē, having done wentest, hast done, etc. (Aligarh).¹

Often the syllable wār or bār is added; compare Myānwālē wāḍ, Dōm uar. Thus, baṭ-wār, dividing; jibbār-ō, came to life (Sitapur); sun-wār-ko, having heard; kar-wār-ō, hast made (Belgaum); baṭ-bār, having divided; lī-bbār-kē, having taken; ra-bbār-ō, wast (Aligarh), and so forth. In the Belgaum specimens we sometimes find wāḍ instead of wār; thus, mīl-wāḍ-ō hē, mīl-wāḍ-dō, and mīl-wār-ō, he is found; tuḍ-wāḍ-ō, broke; paḍ-wāḍ-ko, having fallen, and so forth. It seems probable that we should compare the Mārwarī termination ṛō, which is so frequently added pleonastically. We may also compare the causal terminations Mārwarī wāw, Jaipurī āḍ, Gujarātī āw, āḍ. Forms such as khanēṭō karwārō hai, thou hast made a feast; charwārdō, grazing; bandwār līnō, I have taken having caused it to be attached to me, I have committed, in the Belgaum specimen, are perhaps actually causals. In most cases, however, the addition of wār does not seem to affect the meaning.

This use of added r, wār, bār is accordingly perhaps another point in which Kanjarī agrees with Rājasthānī. Broadly speaking the conjugation of verbs is the same as in that form of speech. In the past tense, however, the termination is ō and not yō; compare karō, did; lagō, began (Etawah). Forms such as dīnō, gave; līnō, took, are well known from Mārwarī and Jaipurī. The l in manālō, entreated (Aligarh); pūchhlō, asked (Etawah), may be comparable, or else it may be another form of the r mentioned above. The s which occurs in several forms such as dīs, gave; līs, took; sunīgulis, heard; lakhārs, said (Aligarh); līnhis, took; dīnis, gave (Etawah); lakhāis, said; riūchhis, asked; kaughis, said (Sitapur), on the other hand, belongs to Eastern Hindī. Such forms are especially common in the Sitapur specimen, and the prevailing language in Sitapur is Awadhī. They are not met with in the Belgaum texts.

In the future we find s forms in Aligarh and Sitapur and g forms in Farrukhabad and Belgaum. Compare kahsū, I will say; karugasū, we will do (Aligarh); lakhāwsū, I will say; lugaoghasī, thou wilt beat, he will beat (Sitapur); huggā, it will be; jāwāgā, I shall go (Farrukhabad); hōwunḡā, I shall be; kuṭunḡō, I shall beat (Belgaum). Similar forms are found in Mārwarī, but more properly belong to Eastern Rājasthānī. In Etawah we find forms such as jānḡ, I shall go; kahnḡ, I shall say. They may be compared with the Jaipurī forms ending in lō. Compare also Naipālī.

So far as we have seen hitherto Kanjarī conjugation broadly agrees with Rājasthānī, especially Eastern Rājasthānī. Another feature seems to point in a different direction. Kanjarī seems to possess a participle the characteristic element of which is d. Compare tīldō, giving; augadō, coming; jaugadō, jāḍō, gone (Aligarh); maddō, dying; kaddō, doing; rahandō-mē, among the inhabitants (Etawah); lugaōḍō, beating; jaughadō, going (Sitapur); hōndō, being; nikkhardō, going; awardō, coming; margōḍō, dead (Belgaum). It will be seen that such forms are used as present and also as past participles. They are also contained in verbal forms. Some of these belong to present time ; thus, chalgudaũ, I go ; dũtdaẽ, they eat (Aligarh) ; lugdaũ, I die ; aughadõ, he is coming (Sitapur) ; maradũ, I die ; dẽndũ, I give ; ãndũ, I come ; nikhardaũ, we, you, they go (Belgaum). Others have the meaning of past tenses. Compare handõ, was (Aligarh) ; jãldõ, was sent (Etawah) ; ãndã, came ; kaindã, said (Farrukhabad) ; hũdõ, was ; lugaõdõ, struck (Sitapur) ; handõ, was ; bharivãr-lẽndõ, would have filled ; gavãndẽ-gaudõ, was lost (Belgaum).

It would be possible to compare the suffix ndõ of the present participle of Sindhi and Naipãli. The fact, however, that these forms are also used in the past perhaps points in a different direction. It will be seen from my remarks on page 296 of Volume IV of this Survey that there is a d-suffix which forms the indefinite present participle in Dravidian languages, and that one of the forms of the corresponding suffix of the past participle in Tamil is ndu. We have already found other possible traces of a Dravidian substratum in KanjarĪ, and the d-suffix may be of the same kind. In this connexion I may also mention the verbal suffixes ir and gir in forms such as lagirõ, began (Aligarh, Etawah, Sitapur) ; ãgõgirõ, came ; augirõ, came ; gaigirõ, went ; lugaighirõ, I have beaten ; jaoghirõ, went (Belgaum), and so on, which look like compounds with the Dravidian iru, is ; kiri, am. The r-suffix mentioned above may have a similar origin. The extensive use of relative participles and the apparent tendency to form a negative verb in Belgaum is of less significance, because the predominant language of the district is Kanarese.

The facts drawn attention to above show that the dialect of the Kanjars is a mixed form of speech, and that the most important ingredient is Eastern Rājasthānī. Some characteristics point to the conclusion that there is, besides, a certain Dravidian element. If anything can be inferred from this state of affairs about the original home of the Kanjars, it would be that they lived somewhere in Eastern Rajasthan or Central India. At the present day we find Gōṇḍ dialects spoken in Bhopal, and there can be no doubt that Dravidian forms of speech once extended farther to the west. It must, however, be remembered that the speech of a vagrant tribe like the Kanjars at the present day can hardly show where their original home is, but only, at the utmost, that they have come into contact with those languages which can be traced in their own speech.

KanjarĪ contains some peculiar words of the same kind as similar forms of speech. Such are lug, die ; lugai, beat (Sitapur) ; chũtokõ, son (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; tipuĩ, bread (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; jhũkĩl, dog (Sitapur) ; dũt, eat (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; thũr, eat (Belgaum) ; jhuraĩ, fire (Sitapur) ; gunḍālẽ, foot (Belgaum) ; gurārõ, foot (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; tiũr, give (Sitapur) ; kĩdõ, give (Belgaum) ; riĩb, house (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; nandõ, house (Belgaum) ; kãjarõ, man (Etawah) ; kãjarõ, man (Belgaum) ; najaũ, man (Sitapur) ; tig, see (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; nĩmãni, water (Sitapur) ; nĩcãni, water (Belgaum), and so forth. Some of the words in use among Kanjars have a Dravidian look. Compare pãḍõ, bull ; awarõ, comes ; kĩdõ, give, in the Belgaum specimens, with Tamil mãḍu, bull ; vara, come ; koḷu, give, respectively, and tiũr, give (Sitapur), with Tamil tara, give. Mr. Kirkpatrick mentions several more such words, such as dhĩmrĩ, bread ; ghamẽlã, sun ; khainch, thief ; khuth, night ; kūrch, drink ; mikatch, death ; ninghār, ghee ; rikā, rupee ; tigro, see ; tūbargo, swim ; tūrrak, sleeping, and so forth. Of these ghamēlā, sun, is of some interest, as being evidently connected with Romani kham, sun, lit. heat.

With regard to the word jhūkil, dog, in the Sitapur texts, and jhūkal in Mr. Kirkpatrick's list, it should be noted that this word likewise presents a marked similarity with the European Gipsy word jukel, dog.

Such words appear to belong to the original vocabulary of the Kanjars, and many of them are no doubt unintelligible to outsiders. The case is a little different with the Arabic numerals which are used by the Kanjars of Belgaum, just as is the case with the Qasāis of the Panjab. The numerals in question will be found in the Standard List of Words and Sentences on pp. 180ff., and their Arabic origin is self-evident.

Like other tribes of the same kind the Kanjars use certain devices for disguising their words and making them unintelligible. The beginning of a word is often changed. Thus kō is prefixed in kōhath, hand (Sitapur) ; kh is prefixed or substituted for another initial in many cases. Compare khachchā, good ; khakāl, famine ; khārō-kē, of the friends (Aligarh) ; khamāl, property (Kheri) ; khāgēlē, before ; khādmī, man ; khawāj, sound ; khakkāl, famine (Sitapur) ; khandar, inside ; khūpar, above (Belgaum). Ch, chh are apparently only prefixed to or substituted for labials ; compare chibarwā-kū, to fill (Aligarh) ; chibrō, big ; chibhāi, brother ; chhūkā-sē, from hunger ; chhītar, inside (Sitapur) ; chait, sit ; chibaḍḍō, big ; chaulā-kē, having called (Belgaum).

Cerebrals are used as disguising letters in words such as ṭakhnī, eye ; ḍharīb, poor ; ḍhilāp, against (Urdū khilāf) ; ḍhusī, merry (Sitapur) ; ḍharrō, big (Aligarh).

N only occurs as a substitute for k or kh in the texts. Compare nēt, field (Aligarh and Sitapur) ; najaū, man ; compare kājarō (Sitapur).

Labials do not appear to be much used in this way. Compare pāḍō, bull (Belgaum), which may be Tamil māḍu or Hindōstānī sāḍ ; bēk, one ; baur, and ; birō, that (Sitapur).

R is of more common occurrence. Compare rakriā-kō rachchā, a goat's young (Aligarh) ; rahnāō, put on ; rarmēsūr, God ; rusāk, cloth ; riūchhis, asked ; ranāi, make ; rahut, much ; rūlak, country ; raṇjūrā-kū, to the servants (Sitapur). In all these instances r has replaced an old labial. It is, however, occasionally also used instead of other sounds ; compare ruāb, answer ; ramā, together ; rarsā-sē, from years, all in the Sitapur texts.

An l is prefixed in lakhācsū, I will say (Sitapur) ; lakhārs, said (Aligarh), and it has been substituted for an n in likārō, bring out.

Words are also disguised by means of additions at the end, and such additions are very common in Kanjarī, just as is the case in Dōm. Some of them such as ō and r have already been mentioned above. With regard to r I may add that it is also added after nouns and adjectives. Compare gurārō, foot ; bhaiyārā, brother (Aligarh) ; chhutārō, small ; ṭhurārā, few (Sitapur) ; phalāri, fruit (Belgaum). Several other additions are used, and most of them are well known from similar argots. The principal ones are, so far as we can judge from the materials-available :—

g or gh is used in words such as aogh, come ; liūghis, took ; haughē, is (Sitapur) ; gaugrō, went (Belgaum). The initial consonant of the suffix gir (ghir) mentioned above is perhaps of the same kind.

An element eṭō or ēthō is comparatively often added. Thus, papēṭō, sin ; malēṭhō, property (Aligarh) ; hattēṭō, hand ; khanēṭō, food (Belgaum).

A dental has been added in words such as ramtā, pity (Sitapur) ; chamakdē, lustre ; bahutdē, many (Belgaum).

A common suffix is ēlō ; thus, khatēlā-mē, on the hand ; batēlī, words (Aligarh) ; hisēlū, share ; papēlō, sin (Sitapur) ; khakēlē, eye ; jibēlī, tongue (Belgaum). Instead of ēlō we also find bēlō and hēlō ; thus, dubēlū, two ; tibēlū, three ; bap-hēlō, father ; bhus-hēlī, chaff ; chum-hēlō, kissed, all in the Sitapur specimens.

The preceding remarks will be sufficient for removing the difficulties in the way of understanding the specimens of Kanjarī which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from the Sitapur district. It will be seen from the Parable and from the Standard List of Words and Sentences printed below on pp. 180ff. that there are comparatively few traces of the influence of Awadhī, the chief language of the district.

A specimen of Kanjarī has also been forwarded from the Kheri District. It does not, however, represent any separate dialect, but is an attempt at writing ordinary Hindōstānī, as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable which follows.

The Kanjari of Aligarh contains a strong Rājasthānī element. As has already been remarked there are, however, some features which seem to show the existence of a Dravidian element, while the s-suffix of the past tense points towards Eastern Hindī.

The specimens received from Etawah are essentially of the same kind as the preceding ones. Note, however, the future forms jānō, I will go; kahnō, I will say, and the greater admixture of Hindōstānī.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A thief entered a house and began to search in the dark if he could find anything valuable. Suddenly he stumbled against a box, which he then carried away. The box was very heavy, and he thought that it might contain some property. Thus thinking he came out of the house and sat down behind a bush in a garden, and tried to open the lock with a nail in order to get at the property. By doing so he moved the spring of a musical instrument which then began to play. The thief got afraid, dropped the instrument and fled for his life. The gardener of the garden woke up from the sound of the thief's footsteps, and when he began to look into the matter, he found out that the sound of a musical instrument came out from the bush. He consequently became no less afraid than the thief. Therefore he fled and reported the matter to the owner of the garden, saying that a ghost had entered the garden. He had the garden surrounded and made a feast behind the bush.

In Belgaum the speech of the Kanjars is known as Kanjarī. Its general nature has been described above, and the specimens which follow do not present any difficulties. The first is a version of the Parable, and the second a popular allegory about the Sun. A Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 180ff. It will be seen that some of the numerals registered in it are, as has already been remarked, Arabic.

Boy, do you know who I am and what my name is? I come from the east. The moment I come, the day breaks. When it is time for you to get up, I stretch forth my golden hand through your window and awake you. I don't come to see you lying in bed. I come that you should be up and bathe, read your books and go to school. I am a fast traveller. I take but one day to travel round the whole sky. I am never tired nor do I ever halt. I have a shining gold crown upon my head. I throw its light in all directions. I spread my rays over water, houses and trees. All things that are lit up by me look beautiful and brilliant. I give you light as well as heat. I ripen fruit and corn. I am very high in the sky. I am high up above trees, clouds and mountains.

KUCHBANDHĪ.

The Kuchbandhīs are a subdivision of the Kanjars. They make the kūch, or brush used by weavers for cleaning thread, and also apply themselves to other of the usual occupations of the Kanjars. A specimen of the so-called Kuchbandhī dialect has been forwarded from the Bahraich District of the United Provinces, the principal language of which is Awadhī. The first lines of it will, however, be sufficient to show that this Kuchbandhī simply is a mixture of Awadhī and Rājasthānī of the same kind as ordinary Kanjarī. Note the genitive suffix rō and the word gihar, man. Some remarks about the argot of the Kuchbandhīs will be found in Mr. Kirkpatrick's paper quoted under Authorities above on p. 97. It is of exactly the same kind as the secret language of other Kanjars, and, like similar argots, it is called Pārsī, or, according to Mr. Kirkpatrick, Pāsī.

NAṬĪ.

The Naṭs are dancers, acrobats and prostitutes and they are found scattered over a wide area. Their total number as returned at the Census of 1911 was 126,428, distributed as follows :—

Number of Naṭs.	Assam	5,143
	Bengal	9,979
	Bihar and Orissa	5,651
	Central Provinces and Berar	11,385
	United Provinces	68,376
	Central India Agency	10,090
	Rajputana Agency	8,447
	Elsewhere	7,357
	TOTAL	126,428

The name Naṭ is a Prakrit-Sanskrit word and means 'dancer,' 'actor.' It does not connote any definite tribe but comprises many different clans, who are only linked together by their common occupation. Numerous names of sub-tribes have been returned from the various districts. Thus we find Baisiyās and Banjārās in Mainpuri, Bēriyās in Etawah, Brijbāsis, who state that they come from Braj, in Bahraich, Pahārī Bhābars in Rampur, Pastos, Tasmabāz, and so forth. This simply means that any tribe may be represented among the people acting as Naṭs.

In such circumstances we cannot expect to find a separate language spoken by the Naṭs. In the information collected for the purposes of this Survey there figures a Naṭ language, returned under the name of naṭō-kī bōlī, with or without specifying additions such as Brijbāsi, Pastō, etc. The figures are as follows :—

Bengal	4,584
Bhagalpur	4,584
United Provinces	6,950
Aligarh	250
Mainpuri	2,000
Etawah	400
Bijnor	1,000
Rampur	300
Kheri	2,500
Bahraich	500
TOTAL	11,534

The specimens received from the districts, however, show that there is no such dialect as Naṭī. The various clans classed together under the head of Naṭs speak the dialect of their neighbours. Like many other wandering tribes, however, they have a professional argot, made up by disguising ordinary words in the same way as in Criminal Sāsi. This argot has nothing to do with grammar. The underlying dialect is either the ordinary vernacular or a mixture of forms derived from different dialects, such as we might reasonably expect in the mouth of travelling professionals who roam over a wide area and who are recruited from more than one tribe or clan. The specimens printed below will, however, show that the dialect of the Naṭs of the United Provinces contains an unmistakable admixture of Rājasthānī. Thus we find forms such as baṭrā, sons; baṭrā-nē, by the son, in addition to the regular baṭrē-nē, by the son; gayō, went; and lilpā, went, in Mainpuri, and so forth. Some few details will be mentioned later on. It therefore seems as if those Naṭs whose speech is represented in our specimens have come from or at least spent some time in Rājasthan. The specimens will, however, also show that these Rājasthānī features are too few and too little thoroughgoing to justify us in classing Naṭī as even a debased form of Rājasthānī. What is meant under the denominations Naṭī and Naṭō kī bōlī is not a definite dialect but the professional argot of the Naṭs.

As in the case of Sāsī the argot of the Naṭs contains several peculiar words such as bōrā, hoy; būnā, chhaṭī, water; chhumkar, day; chilapnā, go; dīmnā, dūtnā, eat; gēm, gaīm, thief; kājā, cultivator, squire; khollā, house; khum, mouth; lagnā, die; lōd, nāḍ, bull; nāl, night; tiyārgū, that (person or thing) concerned; ṭōgnā, drink; ṭuṇḍā, pig, and so forth. Most of such words are known from other argots and dialects such as Sāsī and cannot yet be explained etymologically. Some such terms taken down from the mouth of some Tasuabāz residents of Cawnpore have been printed on pp. 314-316 of the Selections from the Government Records North Western Provinces and Oudh, Vol. i. 1862.

The great majority of Naṭī slang words, however, have been taken from the common Aryan vocabulary of Northern India. To prevent outsiders from understanding them, they are then disguised in the same way as in the argot of the Sāsīs and others. One and the same word can be made unrecognizable in several ways and accordingly assume many different forms.

I have not noted any certain instances of mere transposition. Compare, however, khum, mouth (Bijnor); chūbkā = bachchī, young (Mainpuri).

The prefixing of a consonant, which then often supersedes an old initial, on the other hand, is very common.

A k is prefixed in forms such as kōṭ, eighth (Rampur); kōdmī, man; and substituted for an initial b in kāṭ, share (Mainpuri). Kh is much more common. Compare khi-mālai, property; khimērā, my; khandar, inside; khakāl, famine; khōṭā, small; khin, day; khētai, belly; khainā, having put on; khād, after; khujhē, me (all from Mainpuri); khachchī, water; khunaddī, river; khapānī, water; khāḍā, big one, Sir; khābhēṭiā, wolf (all from Bijnor); khanēṭ, belly (Rampur), and so forth.

Ch is substituted for an old labial in words such as chakar, seize, Hindōstānī pakar; khacholtē, speaking, cf. Hindōstānī bō'nā, in the Bijnor specimens. Chh is similarly used in words such as chhūkal, hungering; chhulk = mulk, country (Mainpuri); chhōd = bahut, much (Rampur), etc. The soft palatals are also used as substitutes for labials in jaṭūp = bāṭā, share; jaṭā = baṭā, big (Rampur); jhurā = burā, evil; jāciyā = bhaiyā, brother (Mainpuri), but also in cases such as jhēk, one; jhakāl, famine (Bhagalpur).

Of dental substitutes we may note thāmnē = sāmnē, before (Rampur), and the frequent use of n, nh; thus, nēt = khēt, field; nāttī = chhātī, breast; nautāj = mohtāj, wanting; namā = samā, together (Mainpuri); nīchhē = pīchhē, after; nanmēśwar = parmēśwar, God; nāth = sāt, seven; nū = tū, thou; nē = thē, were; nhē = chhē, six (Rampur), and so forth.

Of labials we may note, ph in phēr, three (Rampur); b in forms such as bēg, one; bithē, to him (Mainpuri); bōr = aur, and; būkī, watehman (Rampur); and m in words such as mahā = kahā, said; myō = kyū, why? māhtā = chāhtā, wishing; miār = pyār, love; māt = bād, after, and so forth in the Mainpuri specimens. The form marluk, dead, is probably of another kind, the base mar being prefixed to the base lug, to die. In some of the Mainpuri specimens the old initial which has been replaced by m is subsequently added at the end of the word; thus, mētkhē = khēt, field; musīkhē = khusī, merry; mōṭāchhē-nē = chhōṭē-nē, by the younger one; mēṭēbē = bēṭē, sons; māpbē = bāp, father; mērātē = tērā, thy; muarsē = sūar, swine, and so forth.

Of other substitutes we may note l in lilpā = chalā, went; lalchālī = badchālī, bad conduct (Mainpuri); r in rān = kān, ear; rahat = khēt, field (Rampur); rōṭka = chhōṭā, small; rabṭhō = sab, all (Bhagalpur), and so on. R is also used instead of g in the List of Words and Sentences from Rampur printed below on pp. 180ff., in the word tiyārgī rāē, cow, where rāē corresponds to Hindōstānī gāe, while tiyārgī is a pronoun meaning 'that thing just mentioned.'

As in the case of other argots we also find words disguised by means of additions at the end. Note forms such as khētai = pēt, belly; khimālai = māl, property (Mainpuri); labā = lab, direction (Bijnor), and several consonantal additions. Such are, k and g in forms such as kaugā and kōkā, said; gaugā, went; raugā, stayed; paugā, got (Mainpuri); ch and j in hōchā, was (Rampur); kujā, made (Bijnor); cerebrals in forms such as lagāḍnā, to apply (Bijnor); lugārṇā, to beat (Rampur); puchhwārō, asked (Mainpuri); t in forms such as khabāptā, father (Etawah); p in verbs such as deppō, give; lilpā, went; liḡpāi, applying; karpā, made (Mainpuri), and so on. Note also dhūr = dō, two; bāpsā-kē, of the father (Rampur); kūlnā, to do, and the curious forms jālurnā, go; ālurnā, come (Mainpuri); ālre, came (Rampur); jāsurtā, going (Rampur); āsrā, came (Bijnor), and so forth.

It will be seen from the figures given above on p. 121 that most speakers of Naṭī in the United Provinces have been returned from the western part of the Province, from Etawah in the south to Bijnor in the north. We are comparatively best informed about the state of affairs in Mainpuri. There are several tribes in the district who make use of the Naṭ slang, such as the Baisiyās, the Banjārās, the Habūras, the Kanjars and the Kalabāz. The base is apparently everywhere the current Hindōstānī dialect with a tissue of Rājasthānī. This element has not been organically mixed up with the underlying Hindōstānī, but Rājasthānī forms are occasionally used side by side with the ordinary ones. Thus we find instances of the nominative in ō, the oblique base in ā and the plural in ā of strong masculine bases; compare rajēttō chīndā hoichchō, there was a rich man, but commonly forms such as jhayā baṭrā hoichchā, the big son was (in the fields); baṭrā-nē and baṭrē-nē, by the son; ḡhōr baṭrā hoichchē, there were two sons, and so forth. The version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows well illustrates this form of speech. It has been taken down from the mouth of a Baisiyā.

The specimen which follows represents the same kind of Hindōstānī mixed with Rājasthānī. Compare Rājasthānī forms such as khus-kō bayō mēṭābē (i.e. bēṭā), his younger son; māpbai, i.e. bāpai, by the father; mājūrā-kō, to the servants; bhayō-chhā, had become; rauchhũ, I remain; mahō and mahā, said, and so on. Most forms are, however, ordinary Hindōstānī. The specimen has been taken down from the mouth of a Baisiyā. It differs from the preceding one in the common practice of suffixing the original initial of disguised words; thus, mānēgā=gānē, singing; mūtājū=jūtā, shoe, and so forth.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A theft has been committed, and one kettle, one jug, and two plates have been stolen. I went to the police station, and made a report. The police officer wrote it down. Then the Inspector went to his station. Nothing had been found. Four police soldiers and three watchmen had come with the Inspector. The Inspector then collected fifteen or sixteen men and searched the house to find out if a theft had been committed in my house or not. One of them said that he had seen the thieves at work. The wall had been broken by an instrument, and while they were stealing, the children woke and got up. The thieves then ran away. The police officer, however, did not do me justice, and so I filed a petition with the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner called witnesses and took their statement, asking them to tell the truth whether a theft had been committed or not. I have been totally robbed, and if your Honour will not do justice to me, I shall die.

The slang of the Nats of the Etawah district is of the same kind as that used in the neighbouring Mainpuri. Thus we find bōhrā, son, as in Hindōstānī, but bōhrā, sons, as in Rājasthānī, and so forth. It will be enough to print the beginning of a version of the Parable as illustration of this mixed speech.

The Naṭ argot used in the Rampur State is known under the name of Pahārī Bhābar. The admixture of Rājasthānī forms in the specimens received from the State is comparatively small. Compare, however, the alternative genitive suffix rā, rī, rē; the locative suffix nē; forms such as mārā, māhrā, my; nō, i.e. thō, or thā, I was; forms such as rahā, rahlā, and rehlā, was; dinī, gave; kīnī, made, and the future suffixes gā and rā. Note also the aspirated letters in gōghā, went; dudhtē, eating; dhōr, two; thēr, three, etc. The character of this form of speech will be easily recognized from a perusal of the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable, the second a statement relating to a dacoity. The Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 180ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

More than three months ago there was a dacoity in my house at midnight. I was sleeping in a shed outside the house, but my sister was sleeping in the house. I saw a man coming up to my bed, and on my asking him, he said that he was the watchman. I then said, 'that is another man.' Then he went off. He was wearing white clothes. Then some twenty-five or thirty dacoits came and said they were dacoits. The night was dark. They had all sorts of weapons, pistols, swords, sticks and guns, and eight guns were fired. I then fled, but was hit on the head with a knife and with sticks. I then kept quiet lest they should kill me. One man was standing near me with a sword, and started to break the bolt of the door open. Now many of the village people came together, and the dacoits left me. I ran into the village and went about shouting, 'dacoits have entered my house, come quickly.' From all sides the dacoits were firing guns, and nobody ventured to approach. They kept robbing for two hours, and then went off. After that I entered the house and saw that the lock had been broken, the soil dug up, the property of the women taken and all ornaments taken away. They had robbed twenty-one thousand rupees' worth of property. I have given a list of it. The dacoits had burned quilts and straw and thus made a light. I have no ill-feeling against the defendant or against his brother. I did not recognize any one of the dacoits. I do not recognize those dacoits who are standing in court. The property which has been recovered is not mine. They were robbing my house in my presence for one hour.

The Naṭs in the Bijnor District base their argot on a dialect of the same kind as that spoken in Rampur. The Rājasthānī admixture is not very prominent. We may note forms such as khabḍā and khabḍē, O big one, Sir; khabhēḍiā-kē, of the wolf (but khabhēḍiē-nē, by the wolf); āsrā, they came, and so on. Note also future forms such as jāgrā, I will go; kōguṅgā, I will say; compare Sāsī. Another future formation is represented by hōlā, it will be. For further particulars the two specimens which follow should be consulted. The first is the beginning of a version of the Parable; the second a translation of the well-known tale about the wolf and the lamb.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A wolf and a lamb came at the same time to the bank of a clear river to drink water. It was very hot and both were thirsty. The lamb was drinking water a little distance downstream from where the wolf was standing and drinking water. The wolf was very bloodthirsty, and its mouth watered on seeing the sheep. He tried to raise a quarrel in order to get an opportunity of eating him. He said, 'O impudent fellow, is it proper for you to make the water dirty by stirring it with your feet, so that I cannot drink it and may die from thirst?' The poor lamb replied: 'Sir, what do you command? The water flows from you to me and cannot flow from me to you.' Then the wolf said: 'never mind, you are a scoundrel; six months ago you abused me.' Said the lamb, 'how can this be true? I am not six months old. Who can have abused you?' The wolf said: 'if you did not abuse me, it must have been your father, and it is only just that you should be punished for the deeds of your father.' After having said this he seized the lamb, tore it to pieces and ate it.

The Naṭs of the Bahraich District call themselves Brijbāsi and state that they have come from Braj. Their dialect seems to contain a larger admixture of Rājasthānī than we have hitherto found. It is, however, possible that the speech of the different Brijbāsis differs according to their last habitat, and it would be unsafe to base far-reaching conclusions on one single specimen. The first lines of a version of the Parable will be sufficient to show its general character. It will be noticed that the Rājasthānī element is so strong that it can almost be characterised as the base of the dialect. The specimen does not, on the other hand, illustrate the artificial argot of the Naṭs with which we are here concerned.

The argot of the Naṭs of the Bhagalpur District is based on a mixture of Eastern Hindī and Hindōstānī with some Bengali forms. It will be sufficient to give the beginning of a version of the Parable in illustration of this jargon.¹

¹ It is worth noting that the ordinary language of Bhagalpur is Bihārī, a form of speech quite different from Hindī.—G. A. G.

ḌŌM.

The Ḍōms are a menial caste belonging to what Sir Herbert Risley calls the Dravidian type. It is not uniform but comprises several variations and sub-castes. Some Ḍōms supply fire at cremation or act as executioners; others are scavengers, and some have taken to basket and cane working. The Ḍōms in the Himalayan districts have gained a fairly respectable position as husbandmen and artisans, while the wandering Magahiā Ḍōms of Bihar are professional thieves.

The Ḍōms are numerous in Assam, Bengal, the United Provinces and Kashmir.

The following are the figures returned at the Census of 1911 :—

Assam	30,412
Bengal	173,991
Bihar and Orissa	241,903
Central Provinces and Berar	9,344
Panjab	79,916
United Provinces	333,781
Kashmir State	52,099
Elsewhere	4,374
TOTAL	925,820

To these may be added the following, shown in the Census under the names of Bansphōr and Basōr :—

Central Provinces and Berar	52,947
United Provinces	23,095
Baroda State	9
Central India Agency	52,465
TOTAL	128,516

Giving a grand total for Ḍōms under all names of 1,054,336.

The common name of the caste is Ḍōm or Ḍōmrā, a word of uncertain origin.

According to the Brahmavaivartapurāṇa a Ḍama is the son of a lēṭa and a chāṇḍālī, and Ḍama is perhaps the same word as Ḍōma. The ḍōmas or ḍōmbas are mentioned in Sanskrit literature as living by singing and music. The form ḍōmba seems to be the oldest one. It occurs in Varāhamihira's Bṛihatsaṃhitā (lxxvii. 33), which belongs to the sixth century, and several times in Sanskrit works hailing from Kashmir such as the Kathāsaritsāgara of Sōmadēva and the Rājatarāṅgiṇī of Kalhaṇa. There cannot be any doubt that these ḍōmbas are identical with the Ḍōms, and the name of the caste is accordingly old. The base from which it is derived is perhaps onomatopœic; compare Sanskrit ḍam, to sound; ḍamaru, drum. It is probably not Aryan.

The late Professor Hermann Brockhaus of Leipzig was the first to suggest that the word ḍōm might be identical with the name rōm, which the European Gipsies use stray verbal forms such as kihuas-nā, to say; tikunē-sē, from eating; kahā, said; lagā, began, etc. Of Rājasthānī reminiscences we may note the termination ā in the oblique singular and in the plural of strong masculine bases; thus, kājwā-kē du chēṭā, two sons of a man. Most verbal forms and, generally speaking, the whole grammatical system, however, are Bhōjpurī. Compare forms such as khurē, am; karulī, I did; kahlak, said; kahab, shall say; biruarb, we shall become; ṭiguarihē, they will see, and the common base bar, bār, to be.

As in the case of other similar argots there is a certain number of peculiar words. Such are: baurā, boy; ṭēpar, cloth; kājwā, cultivator; ruguar, dead; tigun, eating; tawā, went; khūrkā, horse; ḍaulā, house; bhōth, chōchkā, a Dōm; bhubhur, pig; ghōmēyā, ōban, rupee; gēm, thief, and so forth. Commonly, however, ordinary Aryan words are used but disguised by means of various changes and additions. Occasionally we find transposition of letters, as in ḍhanarphul=karanphul, eardrop. More commonly we see that a consonant is prefixed or substituted for the beginning of a word. The gutturals k and kh are used in this way; thus, kōg=āg, fire; kōhath=hāth, hand; kōhathī=hāthī, elephant; khēk=ēk, one; khakāl=kāl, famine; khingūr=sindūr, red lead; khikuar-kē=nikāl-kē, having taken out; khurē, khōrē=rahē, am. It will be seen that the original word is sometimes also abbreviated and changed in other ways at the same time.

The palatals ch and chh are most frequently substituted for labials; thus, chap-khaiā=pāp, sin; chagrī, pagrī; chēṭā=lēṭā, son; chaikunṭh=baikunṭh, heaven; chāchhrī=machhlī, fish; chibantu=ban, forest; chhiruarkē=phir, again, etc. Sometimes, however, ch is also used before or instead of other sounds; compare chabhī=kabhī, ever; chayā=dayā, compassion; chōkarkhaiā=naukar, servant; chirōṭi=rōṭi, bread. ḍh is used as a substitute in words such as ḍhanarphul=karanphul, eardrop; ḍhasailī=kasailī, betel nut; ḍhasbin=kasbin, harlot; ḍhēm=gēm, thief; ḍhasī=khasī, goat.

n is used in several words such as nōṭ, coat; nētkhaiā=khēt, fields; nuiṭhā=gōṭhā, cowdung; nutā=jutā, shoe; narī=darī, carpet; nēwānī=pānī, water; nahar=shahr, town, etc.

Finally we find r in words such as rōpī=ṭōpī, hat; rēlī=tēlī, oilman, and so forth.

In addition to such devices the Magahiya Dōms show a marked predilection for changing their words by means of additions after them. The numerals two and following thus add an ēm, and we get dulēm, two; tidrēm, three; charēm, four; pañchēm, five; chhalēm, six; sotēm, seven; chaṭēm, eight; navēm, nine; dasēm, ten; bisēm, twenty. Gō is also commonly added to numerals; thus, khēgō, one; dulēm-gō, two; salēm-gō, hundred.

A common addition is also tu; thus, gōrtu, foot; jaḍatu, cold, winter; nīraktu=chirāgh, lamp; jawabtu, an answer; dhantu, property; chichartu=bichār, deliberation; baptu=bāp, father; nalēhatu=ṣalāh, counsel. Compare Sāsī tā.

Other common additions are khaiā, khaihē, khailā in the Saran specimen, and hilā, hilē in the Champaran texts. Thus, nētkhaiā=khēt, field; chumkhaiā=chumā, kissed; chapkhaiā=pāp, sin; bhaikhaiā, brother; saṅghkhaiā, with; samankhaihē=sāmne, before; chaskhāē=pās, towards; bapkhailā=bāp, father; chētkhailā, sense; nētkhailā=khēt, field; garahilā=galā, neck; jutahilā and nōtahilā=jutā, shoe; saṅgahilā, with; sunahilā, heard; samanahilē, before. Note the frequent abbreviation of the vowel of the original word in such cases.

Many different additions are made to verbal bases, and the conjugation of verbs therefore has a very puzzling appearance. If we abstract from stray forms such as khasuaitā=ātā, comes; charsaitā=barsātā, it rains; dēghluarsē=diyā, gave; tigungharuarē, ate, and others, the most characteristic addition is u. This u can be added alone; thus, kih-u-ātē, I will say; kar-u-lī, I did; keh-u-lē and kah-u-alak, said; kir-u-wē, to make; kih-uw-ēs, kih-u-as, kih-u-ēsā, said.

In other cases it is preceded by an s; thus, dī-su, gave; lī-su, took; dī-su-ātā, gives; kha-su-ālē, coming; kha-su-aitā, comes (with kh added in front); kī-suw-atē, have done; a-su-ān, a-su-ānē, a-su-āel, and kha-su-ān, came; chal-so-āel, went; dī-suw-ē, had given; dī-suw-ēs, gavest; dī-suw-as, gave; dī-su-alan, gave; dī-su-alin, gavest.

A very common addition is uar; thus, char-uar-ē, to graze; kah-uar-ē, to say; dēkh-uar-kē, having seen, chaṭ-nar (disu), dividing (gave); rah-uar-ā, remained; ho-wr-ē, it may be; mar-uar-thī, I am dying; kir-uar-lē, I did; dī-suar-tahā, gave; chah-uar-tarhā, he was wishing; rah-uar-ṭwā, rah-uar-ṭōāel, stayed; rah-uar-al, was; bach-uar-ul, was saved; lag-uar-alē, began; tar-uar-lī, I transgressed; rah-uar-alhā, was; chuchh-uar-aluk, asked; mar-uar-alas, has beaten, and so forth; compare Kanjari wār, bār, etc.

The l-suffix of many of these forms is the suffix of the past participle. It also occurs in the present in forms such as bar-u-ala, is; hō-war-al, am, art, is; khō-war-lī, we are; sut-uar-al, sleeps, and so on. Compare Bhōjpuri.

The preceding remarks only explain the most common Dōm devices for disguising common words. There are probably numerous similar ones. Of those occurring in the specimens we may mention the addition of krā in pronouns; thus, khōkrē, by thee; khō-krē-mē-sē, from among them, etc. It should be noted that khu may stand for tū, thou, and also for ū, he. In the case of verbs attention may be drawn to the frequent use of compound tenses formed with the base ṭan, to go; thus, hō-ṭwā, became; rahuar-ṭawā, stayed; par-ṭawān, fell; gaṅgar-ṭōāel, fled; the occasional addition of rat in sunā-rat, he heard, and so forth. Further particulars will be understood from the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the argot of the Magahiṃyā Dōms of Chapra in the Saran District. The two other ones have come from Champaran and have been forwarded as illustrating the slang of the Dōmrās. The first of them is a version of the Parable, the second a short Dōm story.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was once a king, and five thieves came to steal his property. While they were thus occupied the morning came. The five thieves began to consult among themselves. ‘Now none of us will escape. Let us take a bed and put the stolen property on it. Then let us put a cloth over the property as if it were a corpse. Let four of us take the bed at its four legs and put it on our shoulders. Let the fifth one take fire and cowdung in his hand and put a hoe on his shoulder.’ Having done so all five thieves escaped.

MALĀR.

The Malārs are a wandering caste of moulders in brass found in Chota Nagpur. Mr. H. Streatfeild writes of them in the Report of the 1901 Census of Bengal :—

‘They claim to be Hindus and Aryans, but the local tradition is that the original Malār was the elder brother of the original Oṛāṇḍ, and that, having accidentally discovered, while warming himself by a fire one cold morning, that brass could be cast into ornamental shapes by means of sand moulds, he left his brother to do the ploughing and took up casting in brass as a profession. Their work is often very clever; small brass ornaments such as are worn by the Kols, brass ornamentation on weapons, and especially elaborately ornamental poilas or seer measures, being successfully cast by them. In habits they are absolutely nomadic, each family wandering about as work presents itself, staying in a village for a year or two and then moving on. I know two houses of Malārs permanently settled in a Muṇḍā village, speaking Muṇḍārī and working as cultivators, but a regular Malār in the same neighbourhood told me that these were practically outcasted. They have no legends of any ancestral home, and bury their dead in the village where they happen to die without marking the spot in any way. Their language is a slang formed by syllabic perversions of Nāgpuriā.’

The number of Malārs returned in Chota Nagpur at the last Census of 1901¹ was as follows :—

Ranchi	976
Palamau	125
Manbhum	824
Chota Nagpur Tributary States	384
	<hr/>
TOTAL	2,309

In addition to these 9 Malārs were returned from the Andamans.

Mr. Streatfeild has been good enough to send me a short Malār vocabulary. It fully bears out his statement that the language of the Malārs is a slang based on Nāgpuriā. Thus we find the plural suffix man in bī-man, these; bū-man, those; the genitive suffixes kar and kēr in forms such as bū-kar, his; bū-man-kēr, their; verbal forms such as ṭuai-raukhis, going wast, wentest; ṭualak, he has gone; ṭuabai, we shall go; ṭuabā, you will go; ṭuabai, they will go, and so on. So far as can be seen from the scanty materials the inflexional system is the same as in Nāgpuriā throughout. The vocabulary also is the same as in Nāgpuriā though there are several peculiar words such as kurmuṛ, head; khaul, house; khulsā, husband; chēwās, hair; ṭuai, going; ṭōtmā, neck; ḍhaparchū, forehead; ḍharjmā, liver; tutkā, temples; duṛgā, old man; nētrai, blood; nōhkā, man; nōhkin, woman, wife; nōph, breast; pīpinmī, eyelid; baitinī, food; ladarmī, stomach; luluha, wrist; supulmī, foot. In other cases ordinary words are disguised in various ways. In words such as chēōṛmā=chamṛā, skin; kandpaṭhnī=kanpaṭī, temples; tarmū=tālū, palate; baīchhū=bāzū, upper arm; mīsī=mūchh, moustache, we find sporadic instances of slight changes of various kinds within the words. The most common way of disguising words is by adding consonants and syllables in front or at the end, just as in numerous other argots.

¹ They do not appear to have been recorded in 1911.

A k is prefixed in words such as kōig=āg, fire; Kirānchī, Rānchī; kōhāt=hāth, forearm; kōhōr=hār, bone.

Kh is added in the front of some words; thus, khaṅgur, finger; khōīkh=āikh, eye; khamrē=hamrē, we; khimsār=mās, flesh; khirāṛī=rāṇḍī, widow.

Ch and chh are, as usual, prefixed to or substituted for labials; thus, chibhāl, brother; chhētā=bētā, son.

Dh is used in words such as dhēr, a seer.

N is used in a similar way in nail=bhail, bullock.

B is prefixed in pronouns and in the numeral 'one'; thus, bī, this; bū, that; ban, yonder; bēk, one.

R is substituted for a p in rāñchlū=pāch, five; rīth=pīth, back; rōtkai=pēt, belly; and l has been used instead of n in lāmbhmī=nābh, navel.

In chahinbahin, sister, the whole word has been prefixed after substituting a ch for the initial b.

In other cases words are disguised by means of various additions at the end. Such additions are:—

kāi or khai, in rindikai, veranda; rōtkai=pēt, belly; durkhai=dwār, door. Kh alone is added in raukhō, I was. A suffix khulā occurs in dāntkhulā=dāt, tooth.

chū is a very common addition; thus, gāchū=gāl, cheek; jāngchū=jāngh, thigh; jibchū=jibh, tongue; bāpchū=bāp, father, and so forth.

chh is added in mōrchhā, my; tōrchhā, thy; cf. mōēchā, I; tōēchā, thou.

ḍurā has been suffixed in kandurā, ear.

mā, mī, occurs in khaparmā=khaprā, tiles; thēhunmā=thēwnī, knee; bhaumā=bhaū, brow; pakhurmā=pakhaurā, shoulder; barāṛmī=rīṛh, backbone; ērmi=ērī, heel; lāmbhmī=nābh, navel, etc.

r has been added in nākurā=nāk, nose; khimsār=mās, flesh; cf. also uar in verbs such as tapuarek, to warm oneself; joruarek, to light a fire; lipuarek, to whitewash.

l is suffixed in kharchul=karchhā, ladle (also Hindī); dōl, two, and so forth.

Further details may be ascertained from the short vocabulary which follows:—

QAṢĀĪ.

Qaṣāī or Qaṣāb is the name of the butcher caste. The word is derived from Arabic qaṣab, to cut. The number of Qaṣāīs returned at the Census of 1901¹ was 369,533, distributed as follows :—

Name.	Number.
Ajmer	66
Andamans	5
Assam	23
Baluchistan	255
Bengal	11,093
Berar	218
Bombay	24,986
Central Provinces	206
Panjab	125,644
United Provinces	184,150
Baroda	851
Central India	918
Hyderabad	2
Kashmir	824
Rajputana	20,292
TOTAL	369,533

The Qaṣāīs are commonly separated into two endogamous sub-castes, one of which kill cows and buffaloes, while the other only kill goats. In the Panjab the former call themselves bhakkār-sikkhū, cow killers, and the latter mekh-sikkhū, goat killers, or simply sikkhū. The latter are mostly Hindūs, the former Muhammadans of the Sunnī sect.

The Qaṣāīs seem to have a trade language of their own. During the preliminary operations of this Survey a dialect called Qaṣāīyō-kī Farsī was reported to be spoken by 2,700 persons in the Karnal District. Dr. T. Grahame Bailey has given some information about the secret language of those Qaṣāīs of the Panjab who do not kill cows.

Specimens of Qaṣāī have been received from Karnal and also from the Belgaum District. The Qaṣāīs of Karnal, who numbered 5,794 at the 1901 Census, are all Muhammadans. The dialect illustrated by the specimens is of the same kind as the Qaṣāī described by Dr. Bailey. The materials received from Belgaum are stated to illustrate the language of the cow-killing Qaṣāīs. It agrees with the dialect of the Karnal Qaṣāīs in so many points that the two can safely be described as one and the same form of speech, which is an argot based on Hindōstānī. In Karnal we also find Pañjābī forms such as mazdūrā-mē, amongst the servants. In the Belgaum specimens the dialect is much mixed with

Dravidian, and it is probably due to this influence that the case of the agent has been discarded and that the sense of the actual meaning of some verbal forms has been weakened. Forms such as thārtāũ, am, also occur in the second and third persons in addition to thārtai, art, is, and ghāḍuṅgā, I shall beat, is said to be used in all persons and numbers.

The orthography of the specimens does not seem to be consistent. Thus the word tip, see, which is written with a cerebral t by Dr. Bailey and in the Belgaum specimens, occurs as tip in the Karnal version of the Parable. The same text gives dēwarnā, to give, while the second Karnal specimen uses lēwarnā, to take, with a cerebral n. The sound noted th is probably the sound of th in English "think." It had, however, been written th in a Nāgarī transcript which accompanied the Karnal texts. In thūr-nā, eat, this th seems to represent an ś; compare śūḍ, eat, in the Belgaum list and shūḍnā, shūrṇā, to eat, to drink, in the vocabulary published by Dr. Bailey. The same is the case in thīs, six, where Dr. Bailey has this; compare Arabic sids.

The peculiar appearance of the Qasāī argot is, to a great extent, due to the extensive use of strange words. As in the Kanjarī dialect of Belgaum many of the numerals are Arabic. Thus, dhallā (Bailey talā), three, Arabic thalāth; arbā, four, Arabic 'arba'; khammas, Belgaum khammīs, Bailey khammas, five, Arabic khamis; thīs, Bailey this, six, Arabic sids; āsir, ten, Arabic 'ashar.

Numerous other peculiar words occur in the specimens and in Dr. Bailey's List. Such are aḍāl, put; akēl, one (Hindōstānī akēlā, alone); buṭ, father, or, according to Dr. Bailey, a Jāt; baṭlā, rupee; bhakkar, cow; bigarṇā or bigarnā, to die (cf. Hindōstānī bigarṇā?); chilknī, ring (cf. Hindōstānī chilaknā, to glitter); chishmī, application; chuskā, interest; chabīne, tooth; chhanakā, boy; dusarṇā, to say (Belgaum, compare the Kanjarī dialect of the district); gaunā, to get; gaunā, foot (in Belgaum gudāle; in the Karnal specimens gaunā is also used with the meaning of 'hand'); ghārṇā, ghāḍnā, to beat, to loose; gaimb, thief (Bailey); hakūk, swine (Karnal); hajīb, bad (Belgaum); hap-kē-hap (for sab-ke-sab), all together; hiḍap, take; kachēlā (Belgaum), kadrā (Karnal), son (compare bachchā?); kanēlī, bread (Bailey khadēlī, khanēlī); kajilī, afternoon; kahilā (Karnal), kailā (Belgaum), rupee; kasṇā, to pay (perhaps English 'cash'); kīḍ, give (Belgaum, compare Tamil koḍu); khasṭā, property; khilas (Karnal), khilsī (Belgaum), belly; khēḍā, village (Belgaum, Kanarese khēḍā); khū, go; khūm, word, noise; khunsā, starving; lāgwārē (Karnal), hundred; mēknī, goat; minjālī, tongue; nakāt, young, destitute, lost, angry (according to Dr. Bailey the meaning of this word is 'bad,' 'worthless'; it is used in different senses in the first specimen); nakātī, sin; nand (Karnal), nann (Belgaum), house; naṇḍ, water (Bailey); nhāt, run; nīrgā, water (Belgaum); pūḍlā, bull; phēkaṇī, nose; sihām, share; śēbīt, good; subak, younger brother (Belgaum); subūkḍā, man (Belgaum); suwālā, good (Belgaum); śūḍ, eat; thaiḱnā, to become, to gather; thārtā, being; thūr, eat; thōkaṇā, hundred (Belgaum); tip, see; ṭuluk, sleep; uks, go away, and so forth.

In comparison with this extensive use of peculiar words, the disguising of common ones by means of additions in front or at the end plays a much smaller rôle in Qasāī.

Among prefixed elements we may note k in kāndhū, a Hindū (Bailey); jh in jhōrā=thōrā; m in māḍ, village, cf. Sāsī nād; mīh, twenty, cf. bīs; and l in liprā, cloth, cf. Hindōstānī kaprā; land and nand, house.

Of final additions I have found k in bulkā, said; t in hatōtā, hand; kannōtyā, ear; n in akōnyā, eye; l in bandāl, bind; war in āwar, come; diwar, give, etc.; wāḍ in batwāḍ, sit; bōlwāḍ, call; sunwāḍ, hear, and so forth.

Further details will be ascertained from the specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable and the second a Qasāī version of a statement in court, both received from the Karnal District. The third is a popular tale in the dialect of the cow-killing Qasāīs of Belgaum. The Standard List of Words and Sentences from Belgaum will be found below on pp. 181ff.

Binjhaul village was going to be sold. We and our brothers in Jaṭaul came together. They came from there and we from here to Binjhaul, and we agreed to buy the village. The Jaṭaul people said, 'pay the price which may be fixed for twenty biswā¹; you might undertake to pay in four years and also our share of the money. In four years we shall refund you the money with interest, and we shall pay interest every six months.' We had all gathered in one place and consulted, and four days afterwards we came to pay five hundred rupees as earnest-money, and we paid them in the presence of the manager. He told us to come back in a month and get information, and that he might let us have the village for thirty thousand rupees. 'My master,' he said, 'is in Europe. You may get his decision about the sale in a month.' After a month a Banyā² of the Beri District made an application for getting the village at a price of twenty thousand rupees, and we were informed that the Banyā was going to buy it. We had paid five hundred rupees in earnest-money and it would be too bad not to get the village and also to lose our money. We then consulted and went to Beri, and then we all came together and said, 'you are our brothers. There is a Banyā amongst you, and he has resolved to buy the village. We have now come from Jaṭaul. For the sake of our kinship tell the Banyā not to buy the village.' They said to him, 'you are our respected master; listen to our words and let our brothers have the village.' The Banyā took notice of their request and withdrew from the business. Then we brothers got the village.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain village there lived a Patēl named Rāmāyā. One day when he had been to the market, he purchased five excellent mangoes and brought them home. He had four sons, Sank, Bāla, Bhīma and Haṇama. He called his four sons together and said to them, 'children, look here, I have brought these five mangoes from the bazar. Keep four of them for yourselves and give the fifth one to your mother.' The children were pleased to hear these words; they had never before seen such nice mangoes. They took the fruit away and divided them among themselves as they had been told. At bed-time Rāmāyā called his children and said, 'dear children, how did you find the mangoes that were then given to you?' To this Sank, the eldest son, replied, 'father, I found the fruit very good. It is an excellent fruit. I have preserved the stone that I may sow it when the rainy season sets in.'

SIKALGĀRĪ.

The caste known as saiqalgars, siqligars, sikligars. etc., are armourers and polishers of metal. The name is a Persian word, ṣaiqal-gar, a cleaner, polisher, derived from the Arabic base ṣaqal, to polish.

Name.

‘Since the disarming of the country,’ says Mr. Crooke, ‘the trade of the armourer and cutler has become depressed. The ordinary Siqligar seen in towns is a trader of no worth, and his whole stock-in-trade is a circular whetstone (sān) worked by a strap between two posts fixed in the ground. He sharpens a four-bladed knife, a pair of scissors or two razors for a pice. Their status is that of ordinary Muhammāns of the lower artizan class.’

The number of Sikligars returned at the Census of 1911 was 5,922, of whom 2,096 were recorded in the Rajputana Agency, the rest being shown as ‘elsewhere.’

Number.

Of these 4,548 were returned as Hindūs, 818 as Sikhs, and 556 as Musalmāns.

We do not possess any information to the effect that the Sikligars, as a whole, possess a language of their own. A separate dialect called Language.

Sikalgārī was, however, during the preliminary operations of this Survey returned from the Belgaum District of Bombay, where it was said to be spoken by 25 individuals in the Sampgaon talūqa in the south of the district. Two specimens and the Standard List of Words and Sentences in Sikalgārī have been forwarded from that place.

To judge from these materials Sikalgārī in most particulars agrees with Gujarātī. Compare forms such as dikarō, son; dikarā, sons; gāyḍiyō, cows; the case suffixes dative -nē; ablative -tō (Gujarātī -thō); genitive -nō; locative -mā; pronouns such as mārō, my; ham, we; tumē, you; verbal forms such as chhē, is; hotō, was; lidyō, took; malyū, it was got; charāwā-nō, to tend; thēl, become, and so forth.

Some few characteristics, however, point in other directions. With regard to phonology we may note the frequent doubling of consonants and the common disaspiration of aspirates; compare chhukkō, hungering; chōllāwā, to be called; duttinē, having eaten; nittē, always; guttā, bale; khubō, standing; sāḍinē, having searched; hatō, hand. Both features are found in other Gipsy languages. The former may point towards Pañjābī; the latter reminds us of Dravidian.

Of inflexional forms which are not Gujarātī we may note the periphrastic future in gō; thus, thauṅgā, we shall become. Similar forms of the future are also used in Rājasthānī. The termination of the singular is gō as in Eastern Rājasthānī.

The g-future is also used in some Bhil dialects,¹ and it is possible that there is a connexion between Gipsy dialects such as Sikalgārī and Bhilī. Thus it is probable that the dialect described as Siyālgirī in Vol. IX, Part iii, pp. 197 and ff., has something to do with Sikalgārī.

Connexion with Siyālgirī.

¹ See Vol. II, Part iii, p. 7.

Both dialects mainly agree with Gujarātī. They also agree in not possessing the case of the agent, in dropping a v before i and ē, and in the frequent use of a kh instead of an s. This kh has been treated as a spirant kh in dealing with Siyālgirī. In Sikalgārī, however, it is certainly an aspirate as in other Gipsy argots. The Siyālgirs of Midnapore, who are supposed to have immigrated from the west some five or six generations ago, now follow a variety of occupations. Some sell fish, some make and sell bamboo mats, some are cultivators, and a few sell groceries. If they were originally Sikligars, the many points in which their dialect agrees with Sikalgārī are easily explained. The points of disagreement do not present any serious obstacle to this hypothesis, if we remember that the Siyālgirs have long lived among strangers and must necessarily have come under the influence of the dialects spoken by their surroundings. It is more to be wondered that the two forms of speech still present so many points of agreement.

The substitution of a kh instead of an s and also of other sounds in Sikalgārī mentioned above must be compared with the various devices for disguising words in other Gipsy dialects. Sikalgārī is not a simple dialect, but also an artificial argot. There are several peculiar words such as kōyrā, people, men; khālmānyū, swine; khēḍō, village; khōl, house; gār, give; chingā, dress; chōkō, good; chhimnō, horse; dut, eat; dhōtrīyō, belly; nikaṭ, run; nikar, die; nikḍīyō, thief; pāḍō, bull; poṭṭū, child; ranban, wife; sabādā, rupee.

Moreover we find some of the common devices of disguising ordinary words by means of various additions. A kh is sometimes prefixed before words beginning with a vowel; thus, khubō, standing; khuppar, above; kheklā-mā, in so much, in the meantime; khaikīnē, having heard; kh is also frequently substituted for an initial s; thus, khāt, seven; khāmō, before; khārā, all; khāpḍīyō, he was found; khō, hundred. In khyāpāryō, a tradesman, it has replaced a v, cf. Gujarātī vēpārī.

Ch and chk are apparently only substituted for labials, as in other Gipsy argots; compare chōllāwā, to be called; chāyē, way, means, if this is derived from upāy; chhāndī, having bound; chhukkō, hungering.

An n has been substituted for an initial p in nāpchī, sin.

Several words receive additions at the end, and a final consonant is often dropped before such additions.

Several additions contain a guttural. The simplest one consists of a kh, which is substituted for a final s; thus, kāpukh=kapās, cotton; īkh, twenty; dakhalā, ten; manekh, man; warakh, year. A ṭ is added to this kh in forms such as ākhṭī, she came; lēkhṭīyō, tookest. In nikaṭ, run, kaṭ seems to be used in the same way. The addition gōṭ in kagōṭyō, did; ghāgōṭō, put, is perhaps also connected. An n is also sometimes added to these suffixed gutturals; thus, jākan, he goes; gaknyō, went; chhōknō, boy, compare Gujarātī chhōkrō; rhākan, he lives; rhakanyō, he remained. We may add the suffix gal in words such as ghāgal, put; jāgal, go; dhagāl-wā-nū, of catching; phaglinē, again.

It is tempting to compare these additions with the Muṇḍā suffixes kaṭ, kan, which play a great rôle in the conjugation of verbs.

A khl or kl has been added in words such as ekhlā, so many; kekhalā, how many? kheklā-mā, so-much-in, in the meantime.

A ch has been suffixed in words such as nāṇchī, sin; mhēchvī-lē, putting take; compare Gujarātī mēlwū.

Other additions are t, d and p; thus, dēwṭā-nū, of God; jiwṭō, alive; nākōḍū, nose; mhōḍū, mouth; anpū, food.

For further particulars the specimens which follow should be consulted. The first is a version of the Parable, the second a popular tale. The Standard List of Words and Sentences will be found on pp. 181ff.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A merchant in Bijapur was dealing in cotton on a large scale. One day some thieves from the city formed a gang and, seeking an opportunity, stole a number of cotton bales from the merchant's house. Then the merchant went to the King and informed him of the theft committed in his house. The King (sent for the Kotwāl) and gave him the following order, 'that such a theft should have been committed in my town, is really a disgrace. If you fail to trace the thieves within four days, I shall have you beheaded.' At this the Kotwāl tried his best to trace the thieves, but they were not found.

In the meantime the four days granted by the King expired, and the fifth day came. It was announced by the beating of drums that the Kotwāl was to be decapitated. All the people were grieved to hear this, for the Kotwāl was very popular. Hearing this news a clever man in the town went to the King, and joining his hands begged.

GULGULIĀ.

The Gulguliās are a wandering non-Aryan tribe, who live by hunting, teaching monkeys to dance, selling indigenous drugs, begging, and petty thieving. Sir Herbert Risley thinks that they are a branch of the Bediyās.

At the Census of 1911, 853 Gulguliās were returned, 824 from Bihar and Orissa and 29 from elsewhere.

No information about the language of the Gulguliās is available in Census Reports, and no such dialect was reported during the preliminary operations of this Survey. At the Census of 1901 it was, however, reported from the Hazaribagh District that the Gulguliās do not ordinarily speak a separate dialect, but that they make use of a kind of argot when they intend to prevent others from understanding what they say. Three short sentences in this jargon were forwarded to Sir Edward Gait, the then Superintendent of the Census operations in Bengal, and he has been good enough to place them at the disposal of this Survey. They show that this argot is of the same kind as other secret jargons. In the first place there are some peculiar words such as ṭebigō, fell; lugigō, died; kutāchhi, have eaten; liōr, tempest; nēmru, bullock; nāhkat, in the house. Some of these are well known from other argots, compare Sāsī ṭaupā, fall; lugnā, die; dūtṇā, eat; nād, village; Garōḍī nānd, house. Besides this, ordinary words are disguised by changing their initials. Thus kh is substituted for b in khāh=biyāh, wedding, and for p in kheāch=pāch, five; jh for t in jhīn-gō=tīn, three; n for g in nāchh=gāchh, tree, and so forth. I now give the sentences themselves with an inter-linear translation.

Kōrāet	liōr	ṭebigō;	jhīn-gō	nāchh	ṭebigō,	kheāch-gō	nēmru
